NOTICE

Commencing on December 17th and continuing every Thursday thereafter, the regular licensed program will include a new one reel comedy of unusual merit.

Public demand for "funny pictures" is so overwhelming that one reel comedies have become a vital requisite to every daily program.

Exhibitors find it difficult—in many cases impossible—to secure consistently good comedies, and it is to meet precisely this condition that MinA Films have been devised.

They are the result of long special study and practical test by one of the oldest and most successful manufacturers in the industry. MinA Films are recommended for your immediate consideration. Through all licensed exchanges and branches of the

Stockton's Scriptwriting Service

To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:

Script Criticism For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.

Plot Estimates If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script. I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.

Please Note My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

Till Death Us Do Part

RELEASED MONDAY, DECEMBER 21—TWO REELS

An unusual and exceptionally interesting Selig dramatic tragedy, telling the story of a society girl and two men who are cast away on a desert island. The girl contracts leprosy. One of her companions is a skilled scientist and surgeon, and the other is a clubman and athlete. Both fall in love with her. The athlete deserts her in her need, but the courageous scientist elects to share her exile from the world. KATHLYN WILLIAMS, WHEELER OAKMAN and CHARLES CLARY play the leading parts. It is written and produced by COLIN CAMPBELL.

A Colossal Success!

Thanhouser's Greatest Photoplay

Greatest Film Production Ever Staged!

CROWDS, crowds, crowds — the biggest attendance ever recorded in the history of motion picture theatres is being reported from all sections of America where ZUDORA is being shown. This stupendous motion picture serial is now being exhibited at high-class theatres everywhere. Exhibitors are COINING MONEY on it!

Turned Away Thousands in Toledo!

Thousands of people were turned away from the big Princess Theatre in Toledo last Sunday. At six o'clock the house was PACKED and thousands were waiting to gai n admission to see ZUDORA.

Read this telegram:

Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation Toledo, Ohio.
71 W. 23rd St., New York City, N. Y.
Zudora breaking all records in Princess and Colonial Theatres. Every episode full of startling situations. Can recommend highly to all exhibitors.

Same reports come from New York, Chicago, Milwaukee, Seattle, and hundreds of other points.

Exhibitors: Book This Big Serial Feature NOW! ☞

Coming! Newer Things—Bigger Things—in ZUDORA

Watch for New Thrills

IN episodes six, seven and eight of Zudora you will find even more remarkable scenes than in previous episodes. You'll find James Cruze in a marvelous transformation scene in which he turns into the spectacular hero which made him famous in The Million Dollar Mystery. You'll find NEW characters—a new woman of mystery—melodramatic THRILLS and EXCITEMENT galore. Watch for these spectacular events!

Helen Badgley—Thanhouser Kidlet Appears

That greatest of all child wonders—Helen Badgley, the Thanhouser Kidlet—breaks into Zudora and plays a sensational part. You who know the magnetic power which this clever four-year-old actress exhibits among audiences will realize instantly the value this will add to ZUDORA.

Helen Badgley

ZUDORA already is the most stupendous film success ever staged, but we want to let you know that in every episode to come, even greater scenes will appear. Be wise! Book this stellar attraction NOW! See the Thanhouser Syndicate representative at any Mutual Exchange in the United States and Canada.

An open letter
From Carl Laemmle

Gentlemen:

I have just seen the ENTIRE Universal program for the week of January 4th. It was so powerful and contained so many irresistible punches that I became anxious FOR EVERY EXHIBITOR IN THE COUNTRY TO SEE IT, whether he is using Universal films or not.

This is the result of a new system we have put into effect whereby our ENTIRE STAFF looks at our whole program FIVE WEEKS IN ADVANCE OF RELEASE DATE so that if it is not scientifically balanced or if it contains weak spots we can plug up the holes with good stuff.

Formerly only a few heads of departments acted as judges. But now our entire Eastern staff does the work every Tuesday night. It means that our program is going to be better in every respect BECAUSE WE ARE GOING TO THROW OUT EVERY WEAK REEL AND PUT IT ON THE SHELF AND CHARGE IT TO "LOSS".

I want you to make it a particular point to see an advance exhibition of the Universal program for the week of January 4th. It is going to open the eyes of the world. I never saw such a week's supply in all the time I've been in the business. It is not only SCIENTIFICALLY BALANCED but it contains so many big scenes and glorious punches that it is impossible to describe them.

Now please ask THE NEAREST UNIVERSAL EXCHANGE just when and where you can see the Universal program for the week mentioned, and if it can't show you the entire week's program in advance, ask to see as much of it as possible. Do this whether you are satisfied with your present program or not. It certainly can't hurt you any to SEE WHAT THE UNIVERSAL IS DOING.

You'll find a list of Universal exchanges on the opposite page. Look up the nearest one and then TAKE MY TIP!

The most remarkable the history of the film the 1st week of 1915 in

This programme is going to give thousands of Exhibitors, all over this country, the most smashing surprise they have ever experienced. The usual stereotyped words and phrases employed to describe pictures fall absolutely flat in trying to convey the stupendous superiority of this programme over anything and everything ever known in the history of the film industry. If you had studied for years,—had picked, repicked, had seen the cream of all subjects and had finally selected what you considered a great programme, it would fall flat alongside of this remarkable array for this first week in the New Year. You talk about starting the New Year right. If you ever had an opportunity in all your life, this is IT—IT—IT!

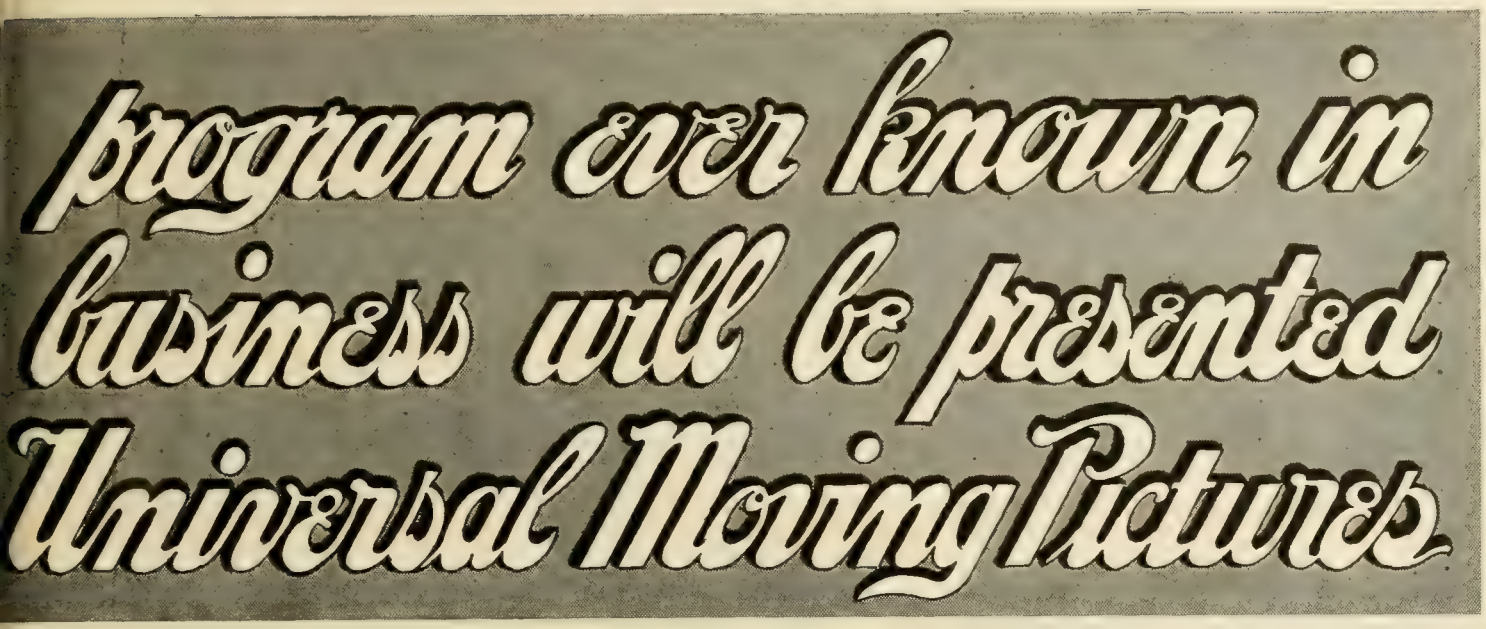
In another advertisement in this paper we publish a list of Universal Exchanges throughout America, and other parts of the world. Set aside everything you may be doing and appoint a time to see this wonder programme. After you have seen what we have prepared,—don't waste one second but WIRE YOUR EXCHANGE instantly. A partial description of the features from this programme on the next page.

VICTOR'S "Terence O'Rourke, Gentleman Adventurer— a Captain of Villainy," the best of the O'Rourke stories to date, in two reels, with J. WARREN KERRIGAN. (Monday, Jan. 4th.)

—Why pay some feature company extra money for a film not half as stirring? WHY?

MOVING UNIVERSAL PICTURES

UNIVERSAL FILM MF'G COMPANY



GOLD SEAL'S "The Mystery of the Throne Room," a wonderful story of a scatter-brain of a girl who actually ruled a kingdom for a time; two reels, with GRACE CUNARD and FRANCIS FORD. (Tuesday, Jan. 5th.)
—Why think the less of this because it isn't offered by a feature company at stiff extra cost? WHY?

L-KO'S "Cupid in a Hospital," the funniest film of this funny brand since "The Manicure Girl," in one reel, with BILLIE RITCHIE. (Wednesday, Jan. 6th.)
—Why pay any program extra money for their BEST comedies when you get the best comedies on earth in Universal REGULAR service? WHY?

BIG U'S "On Desert Sands," great and vivid story of the plains of the redskin and gambler in two reels, with SIDNEY AYRES. (Thursday, Jan. 7th.)
—When OTHER programs secure new stars you pay the piper and the big salary in extra rental money. WHY?

IMP'S "She Was His Mother," a picture protest against the double standard of morals, in three reels, with VIOLET MERSEREAU and HOBART HENLEY. (Friday, Jan. 8th.)
—The lithos alone on this feature would make a special feature company charge you a fat price, if it was THEIR feature. WHY?

101 BISON'S "Custer's Last Scout," being the only narrative in film of the only living witness of the Custer massacre, in two reels, with WILLIAM CLIFFORD, MARIE WALCAMP and SCOUT CHAPMAN himself. (Saturday, Jan. 9th.)
—Imagine a "beat" like this going out in some other service IN THE SERVICE, as is the case here. It can't be done by anyone else on earth. WHY?

REX'S "Star of the Sea," one of the most beautiful and reverent semi-religious dramas ever offered, in two reels, with PAULINE BUSH. (Sunday, Jan. 10th.)
—If a feature company had THIS star and put her out in THIS kind of picture, you'd pay them whatever they asked for it. We save you the extra coin now! WHY?

Book what you can from this programme. You have never seen its equal. Don't wait to write. WIRE your Exchange immediately. Today — This minute.

PROPHET AND PROFIT

(No. 19 Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talks by Carl Laemmle.)

AM a prophet and I don't [illegible]

It's bound to come. If the Universal didn't improve all the time it could not hold your business. Neither could the Universal exchanges. And constant improvement means constant increase of expense. If you don't improve your show your patrons will be weaned away from you. If you can't possibly pay more for service and make a profit, THEN RAISE YOUR PRICE OF ADMISSION SO THAT YOU CAN AFFORD TO BUY THE BEST. Don't try to sidestep the inevitable. Turn prophet into PROFIT. Look ahead!

THANHOUSER PHOTOPLAYS

TRIUMPHS IN HIGH CLASS MOTION PICTURE PRODUCTION

In every industry you will find one organization that is recognized as the quality institution — as the producer of the highest class of merchandise in that line. In the motion picture industry the Thanhouser Film Corporation has won this honor. The exceptional merit of Thanhouser Photoplays is known throughout the world. In the Thanhouser organization are such eminent stars as James Cruze, Florence La Badie, Arthur Ashley, Sidney Bracy, Marguete Snow, Carey L. Hastings, Morris Foster, Nolan Gane, Arthur Bauer, Madeline and Marion Fairbanks, David Thompson, Mignon Anderson, Frank Farrington, Muriel Ostriche and Helen Badgley. In no other film organization will you find such a list of noted players. And back of this collection of stars, is a group of directors and executives that stand supreme in filmdom. Then, too, you will find evidence of the high quality of Thanhouser photoplays in their beautiful settings and clear photography. Three Thanhouser productions are released each week in the United States and Canada exclusively through the Mutual Film Corporation. Exhibitors can arrange bookings for Thanhouser releases at any Mutual Exchange.

For the current week we announce:

Sunday, Dec. 27th, "A Hat Full of Trouble." A one-reel comedy—full of side-splitting scenes. Interpreted by an exceptionally capable cast including Frank Farrington, Fan Bourke, Marion Fairbanks and Ethyle Cooke.

Tuesday, Dec. 29th, "Lucy's Elopement." A two-reel drama by Howell Hansel. In the cast are Justus D. Barnes, Mignon Anderson and Morris Foster—thus assuring a splendid production.

DOROTHY GISH

MAJESTIC AND KOMIC GUIDE FOR EXHIBITORS

(In which [we try to tell] only the truth about all Majestic and Komic releases)

AT DAWN (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Tuesday, Dec. 15—A tragic story of the Philippines, from the short story of Frederick Moore, telling how an American's crime was sternly punished. Fairly well presented.

IN FEAR OF HIS PAST (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, Dec. 20—A strong character society story featuring Mary Alden, Jack Conway and Spottiswoode Aitken. An escaped convict is almost forced into crime by an adventuress, but successfully resists and is at the same time proven innocent of the original charge against him.

BILL AND ETHEL AT THE BALL (1 Reel Komic). Release date Sunday, Dec. 20—A very good "Bill" story from Paul West's office boy series, telling how Bill mixed things up for Ethel and the Boss at the Stenographers' masquerade.

THE BETTER WAY (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Tuesday, Dec. 22—A well-played picture story of strong moral interest presenting Dorothy Gish in a pleasing characterization. A reformed criminal is saved from committing a robbery by his young daughter.

THE OLD FISHERMAN'S STORY (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, Dec. 27—A very affecting picture story of an old fisherman and his two sons, one of whom loses his life that the other may be redeemed.

THE RECORD BREAKER (1 Reel Komic). Release date Sunday, Dec. 27—A farce comedy showing scenes in the great Corona automobile race, where all world's records were broken. The picture features Eddie Pullen, winner of the race, and Fay Tincher, the popular Komic star. An unusual offering.

Facts and Comments

THE desire for system in educational pictures is emphasized by many a communication which reaches the editorial desk. One of the pioneers in the movement for the use of educational pictures in the schools has been the high school of Pasadena, in California. C. H. Carson, the chairman of the Motion Picture Committee of Southern California high schools, writes to THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD that a plan has been worked out "for correlating the pictures with ordinary class work reviewing each week the main points covered in that week's study of the texts." Another evidence of the practical value of Mr. Carson's work will be found in the statement that "there has been formed an association of fifteen or twenty schools of Southern California together with a number of churches and Y. M. C. A. with the hope of eventually forming a regular educational circuit. In addition to this the State Board of Education has taken great interest in the matter and will probably do something very shortly to supply pictures for schools in this section." Here is an example for all teachers who see the value of the film as an aid to education. It is but too true that at this time no complete regular course of kinematographic instruction is available, but it is equally true that a good deal can be done with the materials on hand if the teachers will go to the trouble of painstaking inquiries and of sorting and classifying. We are at present working on a plan which we trust will be of value to all who are interested in the possibilities of the actual supply of motion pictures now available.

AT THE recent meeting of the Executive Board of the National League held in this city a splendid spirit of constructive and eager harmony prevailed. The new year bids fair to witness a substantial and healthy growth of this organization, probably the most important body of men within the industry. The men now at the helm had to contend and are still contending with a legacy of factions and personalities, but they are blazing a new trail and their unselfish devotion to the common weal of the organization is being recognized and encouraged everywhere. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD wishes them well and promises them the fullest support. We have advocated the organization of exhibitors almost with the first issue of this publication.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has both advocated and prophesied a raise in the prices of admission as early as 1908. In an article, "The Ten and Twenty Cent" theater, the subject was treated exhaustively. In fact we have in the course of the years received an occasional protest against our strong stand on this subject. There is just one thing which all advocates of a higher price of admission must realize: The performance must be worth the money. There are thousands of shows all over the country which could not in justice to the public raise the price for the character of their entertainment does not justify it. When we ask for a high price of admission we must be very sure that we are able to give the patrons their money's worth.

BICYCLING films" is becoming a grave nuisance all over the country. It is surprising to see even reputable firms stoop to this most reprehensible species of petty larceny. Exchanges should have no mercy for the "bicycler." We heartily indorse the attitude of a prominent film manager who gathered indisputable evidence that "one of his best customers" indulged in this form of stealing. He summoned the offender before him, told him that his service was discontinued, and showed him the door, declining absolutely to listen to any excuses.

IN ANOTHER part of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD will be found a full report of the final arguments made before a Federal District Court in Philadelphia in the suit of the United States of America against the Motion Picture Patents Company and others. The object of the suit is to dissolve the Patents Company and the General Film Company as corporations existing and operating in restraint of trade. Whether the court will decide in favor of the government and enter a decree of dissolution or whether the suit will be decided in favor of the defendants there can be no doubt of the far-reaching character of the final verdict. In either event the decision will vitally affect conditions in the industry in all its branches.

Broadway Assumption

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT is with a mild degree of amusement that most of us read foreign comment on ourselves. "Americans are this" or "Americans are that" is the usual bare assertion, founded either on a very superficial knowledge of our people or none at all. The country is too big, its interests too complex, its people too diversified for sweeping generalizations, especially by individuals who have scarcely glimpsed whatever contributes to make up national character. Without pretending to grasp the whole subject, it may safely be said that a marked characteristic of Americans is what they battled for in formulating the country—INDEPENDENCE.

There may be found in all ranks a sturdy resentment of patronizing assumption on the part of others, a splendid aspiration to complete freedom of thought and action, amounting in some cases to positive hatred of all forms of irksome restraint. The American thinks for himself, and, as far as it lies within his power, acts according to his own moral sense of what is right and just. It is so deep-seated that it may be said to be incorporated in his nativity.

A large part of the floating population of New York City is composed of these self-reliant individuals, and that floating population sometimes numbers hundreds of thousands. They come as buyers for business houses all over the country; they come in quest of information, of occupation, of pastime, and swarm the hotels and streets around Times Square. Here today and gone tomorrow, they enliven the city and look at one another as New Yorkers, with esteem or disapproval according to immediate impressions or preconceived ideals. "So, this is New York!" they exclaim.

They rarely invade the quiet spots to which New Yorkers retire after the day's work is over, but cluster around Lobster Square and parade the Great White Way, affording the best patrons of theaters as well as of other places of amusement. Among them are serious-minded men and women, those who visit the art galleries, those who become better acquainted with what is really worth while in New York City than its inhabitants, but the great majority of those who help support the amusement enterprises simply spend their money according to the billboard and the glare of lights, very much as they order from the hotel bill of fare something they do not get at home. They may be bored, but they are ready to be easily amused, are in a receptive rather than in a critical frame of mind, simply out to have a good time.

Send these hundreds of thousands back home to a normal frame of mind and bank roll, and the tolerant mood shifts to a critical one. Hence the failure in stock of many a Broadway success, or even the success in stock of what might not suit the ebbing and flowing tides of humanity in the city's great highway. I am not one of those who take it for granted that a play running through a season at a favorably-located house is necessarily great. That it has made a hit gives it a publicity value in other large American centers, but it should have some solid and intrinsic merit before its transformation to photodrama is undertaken.

It is no easy matter to grasp, much less to explain, the mental attitude of the millions who attend picture shows, but there are lines along which that attitude may be reached. Every Wednesday evening the boys of my neighborhood assemble at a distributing depot to lay in a stock of a five-cent story paper of tremendous circulation. Most of us buy it. At one time or another we have found something of interest in its columns; the price is low and we take a chance of finding a story or article which will prove a temporary diversion. That comes fairly near illustrating the mental attitude of those who go to the picture show. There is a reason.

At one time or another there has been a screen visualization, a pictured story or episode, attractive enough to win our patronage. We take a chance and go in hopes of seeing something which will grip and hold our interest for a while, and I do not think most of us care a snap whether it has the Broadway stamp of approval or not. Some may be drawn in by the posters, but the great mass of people have been fooled too often and they incline to fill the theater which presents the program of highest intrinsic merit, Broadway, to the contrary, notwithstanding. It is a case of "Show me."

Let us return to our mutton, the story paper. How many of the authors writing for the paper can you recall? You may have a fair knowledge of the classics stamped upon the tissue of your brain during the age of keen impressions; you may even recall Marion Crawford, Winston Churchill, Robert W. Chambers, Ellen Glasgow, Kate Douglas Wiggin, Robert Herrick, Edith Wharton, Booth Tarkington, Gertrude Atherton and a few others of today, but you cannot keep track of the hundreds of modern story tellers any more than you can remember the Broadway hits. Theatrical men—especially those adapting for the screen—will give you a list of "hits" several yards long, but the plain, ordinary people know little and care less what a screen story has been. Their interest lies in what it is in its new form.

It is perfectly well known to theatrical producers that plays which once were seldom come back, like Camille, for perpetual repetition. Most of them are dead and gone forever, hence the assumption the people will flock to picture shows to see a screen revival has much of the same flavor of truth as the assumption that the people do not know the difference between a poor play and a good one. It was a Broadway assumption that plays should not be criticised by daily papers, and many of these papers fell for it, but is attendance any larger on that account? Is business so good that a majority of Broadway theaters are paying expenses, or are producers and theater-owners rushing to moving pictures for relief?

A great many of our generation have been misled and fooled by "Broadway hits"—one reason why we go to the picture show—and as for the young Americans—Times Square in all its glory is not like unto one of these—their keen eyes note all forms of artistic and scientific errors. It is not Broadway assumption to adapt from a novel or poem of large circulation, nor to transform for screen visualization any play of vigor, especially if it contains a theme of vital interest. Then the whole world loves an adequate performance by noted artists and artistes. They are masters of interpretation, and their personality counts heavily when they are given something worth while to interpret.

The winning play of 1914 will have many bright minds applied to its production, from its initial impulse to its finishing touches, a composite work of general excellence in all departments. That it can make good with an inferior scenario, or with poor types, or with mediocre direction, or with weakness in any one of its departments simply because it pretends to reflect some past success on the stage, is very doubtful—is little more than a Broadway Assumption.

United States vs. Motion Picture Patents Co.

Final Arguments Are Heard Before Justice O. B. Dickinson in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania—Hearing Enlivened by Questions and Incidents—Testimony and Briefs Contain Over Two Million Words—Government Claims Patents Are No Defense Against Charge of Illegal Restraint of Trade—Defendants Say They Acted For the Best of the Industry.

By W. Stephen Bush.

FINAL arguments were heard in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania in the case of United States of America, Petitioner, against Motion Picture Patents Company and others, Defendants. The discussion and presentation of the evidence in the case began before Justice O. B. Dickinson in the Federal Building at Philadelphia, Tuesday, Dec. 8, and it was Friday of the same week before the last word had been heard.

The suit, it will be remembered, began on Aug. 15, 1912, when the Attorney-General of the United States filed a petition in the above-named court asking for a decree of dissolution against the Motion Picture Patents Company and the General Film Company on the ground that these corporations were operating in violation of the Sherman Act. The defendants submitted a general denial and in addition set up several separate and distinct defenses, chief of which was the allegation that they were operating under patents granted to them by the government. After issue had been joined Justice J. W. Thompson on Jan. 7, 1913, appointed Edward Hacker as Special Examiner to take the testimony in the case. The Special Examiner held numerous sessions at irregular intervals between the date of his appointment and the fall of the expiring year. The testimony given in the course of these hearings, substantially reported in the Moving Picture World, together with the exhibits, consists of six printed volumes containing 3,435 pages, at about five hundred words to a page. Add to this the briefs submitted by counsel for both sides totaling about 800 printed pages and it will be seen that the record is a very voluminous one, equaling and even surpassing in the mere number of words most of the famous works of literature.

Edwin P. Grosvenor, who had been designated by the Attorney General to prosecute the case against the defendants and who had attended all the hearings, is no longer in the employ of the government, but at the special request of the Attorney General he made the final argument for the petitioner before Justice Dickinson. The defendants were represented before Justice F. Kingsley, James H. Caldwell, Henry Melville, Samuel Owen Edmonds, George R. Willis, Reuben O. Moon and James J. Allen.

Interesting Sidelights.

Though the proceedings were of a strictly formal and solemn character there were not wanting occasional touches of humor and human interest. The court room in which the arguments were heard is like all court rooms in the old Federal Buildings of the East—severe in the simplicity of its furnishings, the sombre walls being relieved by nothing livelier than memorial tablets and oil paintings of austere-looking jurists who had won fame in the legal past. Set in these stern and plain surroundings were moving picture machines, quite a number of old and rusty contrivances showing what relics of the early periods are still in existence, huge drawings of patents mounted on easels, altogether reminding one of an archaeological museum of kinematography.

As counsel were getting ready for the fray Justice Dickinson declared with something of a smile that his only present practical knowledge of motion pictures was that of a fairly regular patron of these shows, and that he was approaching the subjects in dispute with an entirely free and open mind. Justice Dickinson has a reputation for hard and faithful work and some of the New York lawyers were shocked not a little when after a night session of two hours he announced that the hearing would be resumed at nine o'clock the next morning.

Grosvenor Opens for the Government.

Mr. Grosvenor opened the argument on behalf of the government. He gave a brief outline of facts, setting forth that the commerce restrained was the commerce in positive motion picture films and to a less extent the commerce in motion picture appliances and apparatus. There are, he said, 20,000 or more of these motion picture films continually in transit moving from the manufacturers to exchanges and from exchanges to theaters and returning by the same routes. He then sketched somewhat rapidly the origin and purposes of the defendant corporations, whose activities "had impressed their unlawful methods of doing business upon the producing, the distributing and the exhibiting branch of the industry." Mr. Grosvenor said in the course of his discussion of the evidence that "under guise of royalties the manufacturers compelled the payment by the exhibitors of $2 a week on all projecting machines, many of which had been sold by the manufacturers to the exhibitors long before the combination was formed. These machines had been sold without conditions attached thereto."

Mr. Grosvenor dwelt with considerable emphasis upon the fact that the members of the alleged unlawful combination had adopted the uniform method of leasing the films instead of selling them outright, as had been the custom in the trade before the alleged monopoly was organized. The films were leased, said Mr. Grosvenor, in order that by writs of replevin the manufacturers might summarily recover possession of the films if the exchange man or exhibitor violated any of the restrictions imposed by the combination. Hundreds of replevin suits had been brought, he said, as a means of terrorizing exchanges and exhibitors. Mr. Grosvenor also claimed that the General Film Company had forced many exchanges out of business by withholding the supply of film and by other arbitrary, oppressive and high-handed methods.

The Legal Contentions of the Government.

Passing to the legal aspects of the case, Mr. Grosvenor, in a general way, defined the objects and the policy of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law. The law, he contended, prohibits as illegal all acts which essentially obstruct the free flow of commerce between the states or which restrict the liberty of a trader to engage in interstate commerce, or which are unreasonably restrictive of competitive conditions. The direct effects of the acts involved is the criterion by which it is to be determined in any case whether the combination is a restraint of trade within the intendment of the law. Therefore, reason becomes the guide. If the necessary and direct effect of their acts is an obstruction to the free flow of commerce between the states or an interference with the liberty of the trader to engage in interstate commerce or an undue suppression of competition defendants have violated the act no matter what primary intent or motive may have actuated them. It matters not what form the combination may take or what garb or dress it may put on. The attorney for the government cited the words of the late Justice Harlan, who in the Northern Securities case referred to the Sherman act in these terms: "No device in evasion of its provisions, however skilfully such device may have been contrived and no combination by whomsoever formed, is beyond the reach of the supreme law of the land if such device or combination by its operation directly restrains commerce among the states." A combination to suppress competition given the form of licenses under patents was held unlawful in the so-called Bathtub Trust case regardless of an alleged intent assumed by the Court to be present to improve the quality of the ware.

Mr. Grosvenor cited a host of authorities in support of his legal contentions. He said that in the Bathtub Trust case Justice McKenna wrote "that patents and patent rights cannot be made a cover for violation of law." The same Court, the Supreme Court of the United States, held that a patentee may not limit the prices at which future retail sales of the patented articles may be made. "Rights conferred by patents are indeed very definite and extensive, but they do not give any more than other rights a universal license against positive prohibitions. The Sherman law is a limitation of rights—rights which may be pushed to evil consequences and therefore restrained." Again reverting to the Bathtub Trust case, Mr. Grosvenor quoted the following language of Judge Rose of the Supreme Court: "A patentee is as much subject to the laws of the land as is any other man. The patentee may, in spite of the law, monopolize for the term of his patent the thing which he or his assignor invented. Neither at common law nor in this country by statute has he ever had a right to monopolize anything else. A patent does not give a right to the patentee to violate the law of the land be it the Sherman act or another." Citing the words of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in the well-known ease of the U. S. Shoe Machinery Co. against La Chapelle, Mr. Grosvenor contended "that no word or phrase in the Sherman Anti-Trust Act reveals an intent to exempt the owners of patents from its sweeping provisions against monopolistic combination."

Oppression Alleged by Government.

Mr. Grosvenor went at considerable length into the acts of alleged oppression by the defendants. He told in detail of the methods used in the absorption of the film exchanges in 1910. He claimed that the entire agreement between the Motion Picture Patents Company and the old licensed exchanges was unfair and illegal and constituted evidence of the arbitrary power unlawfully sought by the defendants. As the defendants practically controlled all the sources of supply they could and did wipe out exchanges without even the semblance of fairness. "Between Aug. 18, 1909," said Mr. Grosvenor, "and Dec. 30, 1912, the defendants cancelled the licenses of 512 theaters located in 45 states. Between September, 1909, and November, 1912, the defendants refused to grant licenses to 147 theaters located in 32 states. The attorney freely quoted from the circulars to rental exchanges and exhibitors. These circulars, sent broadcast to all exchanges and exhibitors, contain the names of many exchanges and exhibitors who have been cut off from supplies of films, the purpose of the notice being to warn others not to deal with those thus cut off. In this respect the circulars are like those declared unlawful in the most recent decision of the Supreme Court under the Sherman act. Mr. Grosvenor examined the licensing agreements in detail and called attention to what he styled their unreasonable and tyrannical provisions, which enabled the defendants to put out of business any exchange they wanted to get rid of.

Defendants Take Up the Cudgels.

Reserving his legal right to reply and to make the closing argument, Mr. Grosvenor here yielded to the attorneys for the defendants. Three of the defendants' lawyers addressed the court in exhaustive arguments, Charles F. Kingsley speaking on the facts, R. O. Moon on the law and Melville Church on patents. The arguments of the three attorneys are summarized together for the convenience of the reader. The defendants after a little discussion with the judge admitted that their rights to do what they had done depended entirely on their patents and that without their patents their acts would doubtlessly have constituted a violation of the provisions of the Sherman act. The principal patents upon which defendants relied were the Latham Loop, the Pross Shutter, the Armat-Jenkins Patents and the Edison Patents. A brief history of the litigation between the owners of the patents was submitted, showing mutual infringements and general confusion and uncertainty. To end this waste, which threatened to overwhelm the industry and practically ruin it, the litigants, after much effort, decided to pool their rights and to discontinue all suits then pending between the various members of the defendant corporations. Their motives, counsel said, were not entirely selfish. They wanted to bring order out of chaos and put the business on a stable and enduring basis. To do this successfully some power and responsibility had to be assumed, but at no time did the defendants overstep the limits of the law. The many irresponsible and undesirable elements in the ranks of the exchanges and the exhibitors made stringent measures necessary.

As to the legal right to use their patents in any manner they saw fit there could be no doubt, according to counsel of defense. All the patents upon which the agreements of the defendants were based are essential to the motion picture entertainment, and as far as they are still in force they are all owned by the defendant, Motion Picture Patents Company. The Biograph Company is the owner of the Armat and the Latham and the Press patents by virtue of lawful purchase. If these patents at times seemed to be insufficiently protected by their owners the cause was to be sought in the financial weakness of these patentees, who could not afford to engage in patent litigation which is notoriously expensive. The Edison Company and the Biograph Company as the assignees of the three patents just mentioned were never guilty of any neglect in enforcing their rights under the patents. The defendants' counsel went exhaustively into the protracted and tedious litigation which had centered around the Edison and Biograph patents. They said that the validity of all the essential patents had been established in this litigation beyond all doubt.

Motion Pictures Are a New Art.

A new and interesting defense was set up by the claim that the motion picture film being a work of art was not amenable to the laws applying to interstate commerce. This part of the argument was cleverly developed by Mr. Kingsley

"Motion pictures," said Mr. Kingsley in the course of his address, "are not articles of commerce like lumber, cheese, beef or turpentine. They are works of the fine arts and of a literary and dramatic essence. They may have protection under the copyright law because of this fact and their producer has the legal status of an author and therefore the same rights. A broad and fundamental difference exists between literary and artistic products on the one hand and purely commercial products on the other. Potatoes or cheese, for instance, are articles of interstate commerce, but it makes no difference whether they were raised by Farmer Smith or Farmer Jones. They serve their purpose and the individuality of neither husbandman concerns the public. However, when it comes to buying a picture, a poem, a piece of music or a play the identity and personality of the author become a question of profound concern, go to the merits of the work and directly reflect themselves in the price. These are not commodities of interstate trade, but intellectual and mental expressions, creatures of the brain and the imagination.

"Pig iron and potatoes will be produced from century to century and by millions of men in whose identity the public will not have the slightest interest. As a result of physical effort varying perhaps in skill and efficiency, but not sufficiently to individualize, the product a given number of farmers will produce a given number of bushels of potatoes. A given number of miners and furnacemen will produce a given number of tons of pig-iron. Pictures, dramas, photoplays and poems will have the distinction then as now that they exist and have an individuality representative of the intellectuality of their authors. Pig iron and potatoes will be produced in large quantities in Europe next year no matter how many men fall in the present war of nations, but if Rudyard Kipling should be killed the peculiar kind of product to which his remarkable individuality gives distinction would end. No one else could do just that kind of work. Shakespeare cannot write 'Paradise Lost' nor Milton 'Much Ado,' though before both Dante dreamed and Boccaccio told his tales.

"The author of a play may utilize it in several ways. He may publish and sell it as a purely literary product and surrender his dramatic rights. He may copyright, publish and sell it and reserve the dramatic rights. He may refuse either to publish it or relinquish the dramatic rights. While the play is forming in his brain after it has taken shape therein so that he may give it expression at will it is a part of his individuality and of himself. It is an incorporeal possession of which he alone knows. Long before he has perfected the play he may have done many hours of hard work thereon and it may be that when he is ready to give it expression practically all of the necessary mental effort has been made. He may express his ideas briefly in writing or he may amplify them to the dimensions of a play. The written pages are expression of his intellectual conceptions. These intellectual conceptions are his very own in the highest sense of possession because they sprang from his brain and the arrangement of the symbols which convey them to other minds in orderly sequence constitutes what Lord Mansfield denominated a 'property in notion.' He has a common-law right upon the manuscript and the law will protect him in it. The purpose, however, that he had in view when he entered upon his task was not to set down a play in written words. His vision looked to the actual public production of his play before public audiences for profit. The right to produce his play in a theater is a supreme right and vests in him absolutely. He may give his play in as many theaters simultaneously as he sees fit, and as long as he does not voluntarily dedicate it to the public or permit a freedom of usage outside his control amounting to a dedication the law will protect him in that right irrespective of whether he has invoked the protection of the copyright act or not. That is because the law recognizes that property in motion is absolutely, essentially and radically different from property in bricks, in cheese or in lumber. The author may stage the play in his own theater, rehearse it carefully, secure a representation distinguished for skill, vivacity and intelligence and record it by means of a motion picture camera."

All this and much more of the same lucid line of argument Mr. Kingsley urged with a good deal of emphasis, concluding with this point:

"From studio to theater the play is the dominant factor in every activity on the part of producer, rental exchange and exhibitor and all are leasing and subleasing the motion picture or the play on the film and not the film itself, which is but a vehicle for carrying the symbols of expression."

Noble and Unselfish Aims of Patents Company Are Urged by Defense.

Mr. Moon, in the course of his address, laid stress upon the desire of the defendant corporations to uplift the motion picture industry and free it from technical imperfections and moral defects. He declared that a conditional rather than an absolute sale of film was decided upon by the defendants because it had been found as a matter of fact that after film had been in general use for about six months it usually became unfit for further use and that there always occurred annoying breaks in old and worn-out film which seriously interfered with the enjoyment of the public. As the witness Marvin so clearly explained, "the emulsion would be scraped off in spots, causing bright flashes on the screen which were painful to the eye." The leasing provision therefore was based upon the very highest business considerations. One of the most serious defects to which the motion film record is subject is mutilation by loss of some portions of it. It frequently happens that when that picture strip is passed through the projecting machine that the machine may clog, the sprocket holes may become torn and the film may break. In that case it is customary for the operator or the inspector to cut out bodily a few inches of the piece, a few feet of the strip, and stick the ends together. That may occur at a very crucial moment in the play, and in such a way as sometimes to destroy the sequence of the dramatic events. Now, if these picture strips are sold and passed beyond the control of the producer there is no way in which it is possible to prevent their public exhibition. Besides, counsel argued, there was the moral aspect. "The Patents Company," it was declared, "and its licensees not only strove to improve the artistic quality of motion pictures, abolish evils incident to the business and stimulate public demand for them, but they upheld the hands of those who desired a moral improvement in the tone and subjects of the films."

Counsel referred to the testimony of Mr. Marvin, who pointed out that at the time of the formation of the Patents Company exhibitions of indecent films in low dance halls and saloons were bringing discredit on the entire business. A self-imposed censorship was therefore established and the Patents Company helped to finance the National Board of Censorship, which had been doing and is still doing such splendid work in the way of voluntary censorship.

A Mild Sensation.

As Mr. Moon warmed to his argument he looked frequently in the direction of Lawyer Gustavus N. Rogers, who sat at the counsel table with the representative of the Attorney General. Mr. Rogers, it will be remembered, is the attorney of William Fox and has taken a good deal of interest in the suit of the government against the defendant corporations. As he discussed various phases of the litigation between Fox and the defendant corporations Moon declared with a rising inflection in his voice that it was not the United States which was the real plaintiff and petitioner in this proceeding, but William Fox, a New York exchange man and film dealer. This statement was followed by subdued excitement and by objections of Mr. Grosvenor. Mr. Rogers rose and offered to make a statement, but as he was not a party to the action and as Fox had no connection whatever with the present proceeding the Court decided that no statement from Mr. Rogers was necessary unless the latter wished to make it a question of personal privilege. Mr. Rogers thought no such question was involved and the incident passed off quietly enough. Mr. Moon, however, insisted on some more references to Fox. "My clients," he exclaimed in ringing tones, "have become obsessed with the cruel suspicion that Fox is the real plaintiff because Fox's lawyer is in court conferring with Mr. Grosvenor and has been present at every hearing and at every step taken in the case since its inception." Mr. Moon was interrupted once or twice by the Court, who asked him questions.

"The question," the Court declared, after one of these interruptions, "is simply this: Your clients are entering a race and the rule of the race is that none but runners equipped with certain shoes are permitted to take part. Now, if your clients had nothing to do with this rule they cannot be blamed because the track management has made a rule against the users of other shoes than theirs. If on the other hand your clients come into the track and regardless of any rule made by the management simply begin to crowd off all competitors it is quite a different thing."

Judge Dickinson frequently interrupted counsel to ask questions for his own information and showed a very keen interest in every argument submitted by counsel.

Counsel for the defendants ridiculed the idea that their clients were operating in restraint of trade. Mr. Moon pointed out that even if it could be held that these motion pictures are commodities in interstate commerce such commerce therein was created by the instrumentality of the patents themselves and the defendants cannot be charged with restraining or monopolizing a commerce which was nonexistent at the time the patents were issued. A combination of these patents in one ownership could not possibly take from the people of the United States any right to the free and unrestricted dealing in motion pictures which, but for this combination, they would have enjoyed because the articles themselves in toto derive their existence from the patents. In other words the patents were not for the improvement of a method to supply an existing want, but they created the want itself. They could not operate to restrict existing commerce because they created the commerce itself.

Grosvenor Claims Positive Film Is Unpatented Article.

The attorney for the government made his closing argument on Thursday night and Friday morning. "No patent," he declared, "covers the positive film. Even if I grant for the sake of argument that the Edison reissue (No. 12192) is a valid patent it does by no means follow that the positive film is included within the terms of that patent. The positive film may be copyrighted and receive the protection given by the copyright law. Even as I take the language of the letters patent in 12,192 I find no reference therein to the positive film. By what principle may letters patent be construed to cover an object physically separate and distinct from the object which is described in the patent as the patented articles? None of the defendants make the film which has made motion pictures possible nor do they own any patents thereon. The film is made by the Eastman Kodak Company, which supplies two standard types—one for use in the camera, the negative film and one type for use in printing positives from the negative. These two types are different products."

Mr. Grosvenor then vigorously attacked the value or the validity of the patents under which the defendant corporations have operated. He devoted some time to the consideration of the testimony of Mr. Marvin and Mr. Berst, who he claimed denounced the Latham and other hostile patents while they were infringing on them and then proclaimed them as the cornerstones of the industry after they had acquired them. On the question of the patents Mr. Grosvenor said no scientific man had been called as a witness by the defendant. Marvin was the only witness called and whether he is competent or incompetent he surely is an interested party. He emphasized the fact that there were sixteen patents alleged by the defendants in their original license agreement, ten of which were notoriously useless. These useless patents, he said, were just added in to make the document more mystifying to the exhibitors and the exchanges, a plan which was characteristic of all the works of the defendants. He declared that several of the patents had been repeatedly on the point of lapsing through laches on the part of the owners, who either did not care or lacked the means to enforce them.

Speaking of the claim that the trade in motion pictures was created by patents, Mr. Grosvenor said that patents when they sought the ordinary channels of commerce such, for instance, as the commerce between the states, must needs be subject to the laws made for the purpose of regulating trade and commerce. The possession of even valid patents, said the speaker, did not insure the patentees against prosecution under the Sherman act. The patented article must take its chances with the unpatented article when both enter the channels of commerce. If commerce between the states is restrained through the medium of patents the restraint is just as reprehensible and just as amenable to the law as if there were no patents at all.

If the Court sustains such agreements as were made by and between the defendant corporations there must result a perpetual monopoly and a perpetual restraint of trade. As one patent after another expires some man in the corporation might take out a new patent and thus renew the life and the monopolistic control exercised by the defendants. He took up the provisions of the agreements in question one by one and declared them to be in absolute violation of the Sherman statute. He scored the requirement which made the granting of a license contingent upon the amount of business done by an exchange. "It was no concern of the defendants," he said, "how much their exchanges made." He closed by citing what he described as flagrant instances of the exercise of arbitrary power on the part of the defendants.

An early decision is expected as Judge Dickinson is a conscientious and rapid worker. Both sides have the right to appeal from the decision of the District to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Whether in case of an unanimous affirmance by the latter of the judgment of the lower court a further appeal is permissible to the Supreme Court is doubtful, the attorneys for the defendants and for the petitioner differing emphatically.

Boston Theater License Held Up

City of Boston Files Suit in Equity Against Park Theater—Building Commissioner Says Structure Is Not Fireproof.

THEATER owners and moving picture patrons are anxiously awaiting the results which will follow a bill in equity which has been filed in the Suffolk County Superior Court by the city of Boston against the Park Theater, in that city. Through this bill the city seeks to restrain the theater owners from using the building it now occupies for moving picture purposes until the building shall be put into such condition as to comply with the laws as set down by the building department, which require first-class construction.

The bill also states that Building Commissioner O'Hearn has not approved of the location of the film booth in the theater, the use of which under the laws comes within the jurisdiction of the state police, although its location requires the approval of the building commissioner of the city. The theater, which was an old Frohman house, has just been renovated by the new owners—Moe Marks and William E. Greene—at a cost of $100,000. Although the theater has no moving picture license it is giving daily photoplay shows. The house opened a week ago. When the management applied to Mayor James M. Curley for a moving picture license, they were refused. By special permission of the mayor, however, they were allowed to open on account of the extensive preparations which had been made.

Building Commissioner O'Hearn told the mayor that the license could not be granted. To prove his stand he quoted from the new building law of the last Legislature: "Every building hereafter erected for, altered to, or converted to use as a moving picture house shall be a first-class building." The Park theater, never before operated under a moving picture license and was altered to use as a picture house, according to O'Hearn. Consequently, he insisted, that it must be of first-class construction. "But," he declared, "this theater is not of first-class construction, for when it was altered the floor was not made fireproof." To moving picture men in Boston it appears as though the Park theater is the victim of a "frame-up." Two other theaters in the immediate neighborhood of the house and against whom the house is running in opposition, were recently converted to use as moving picture houses. These buildings were not made fireproof, but they received their licenses.

Mayor Curley has the power to issue license without the approval of the building commissioner, but in this case, even if he were so inclined, he could not issue the license without the commissioner's approval of the operator's booth. The new law reads: "In the city of Boston the location of any booth or inclosure surrounding such apparatus shall be approved by the building commissioner, who may order such additional precautions against fire as he may deem necessary." The firm attitude on the matter maintained by O'Hearn served to settle the affair. The mayor, however, issued a license for "dramatic, theatrical and vaudeville performances," but did not issue one to show moving pictures.

O'Hearn stated that he would close the building if they opened the following day, but after a conference with the mayor and Corporation Counsel Sullivan, it was agreed to have the trouble adjusted by the courts. This resulted in the filing of the suit in equity. O'Hearn also stated that when application was made for permits to alter the building, he was told that it was to continue as a legitimate theater.

Mayor Curley later in the week refused to grant the theater a license for a Sunday concert. He declared that he was unwilling to take any action with the house until the court decides on the use of the building as a moving picture theater. Despite the fact that the controversy was printed at length in all the Boston newspapers, the new theater, with the Paramount feature, "Rose of the Rancho," as an attraction, played to capacity every day.

Building Commissioner O'Hearn has hinted that there is more trouble in store for the moving picture people, by declaring that he does not approve of special licenses being granted for one night shows unless the apparatus and the building in which the pictures are exhibited, conform as strictly to the law as if they were to be used permanently. In discussing this matter, Mr. O'Hearn said: "I will not approve of any enclosure for a one-night or temporary show that would not meet my approval for permanent shows. This means not only that the booth itself must be up to the mark, but that the building must be of first-class construction. The danger is not lessened by the show being temporary, for disaster might occur in a building on just the one night it was being used for temporary moving pictures."

Christmas Bill at Vitagraph Theater

Special Program Arranged for the Holiday Week—A Four-Part Comedy Featuring Cissy Fitz-Gerald, the Big Number.

A SPECIAL holiday bill has been arranged by the Broadway Star Feature Company for the Vitagraph Theater, New York City, Christmas week program, beginning Sunday, Dec. 20, when appropriate pictures, embodying the spirit of Yuletide, will be the feature. Not only will the entire program reflect the joyousness of Christmas, but the feature picture, a four-part comedy produced by Geo. D. Baker, entitled, "How Cissy Made Good," will be especially attractive, as it brings into the story the entire personnel of Vitagraph stars, directors and stock members, headed by Cissy Fitz-Gerald and Flora Finch, introducing glimpses of the various departments with their heads and a bird's-eye view of the Vitagraph Studios at Brooklyn.

The personal appearance of Sidney Drew and his associate Vitagraph players will begin their third week on Sunday night, in S. Rankin Drew's dramatic playlet, "What the Moon Saw," appearing every night and at the Saturday matinees, with a special Xmas matinee Friday, Dec. 25.

The multiple reel picture of the program, "How Cissy Made Good," tells the story of a magazine writer's adventures at the Vitagraph Studios while trying to secure interviews with all the stars for a motion picture magazine. Cissy Fitz-Gerald plays the part of the heroine and becomes the butt of innumerable jokes, instigated by Flora Finch and perpetrated by numerous stars and directors, until she accidentally falls into the big tank. The accident sobers the festive spirit of the jokers, and, to make amends for the worry they caused her, Cissy is presented with personally written interviews by the stars themselves, and on her return to the office of the magazine is made doubly happy by being engaged as a special writer at a pleasing salary.

The picture part of the program which will be shown every night and at the daily matinees will include besides the four-part comedy, "Sweeny's Christmas Bird," and "The Professor's Romance," two single reel comedies and "By the Governor's Order," a two-part drama featuring Maurice Costello. The Mezzanotte Trio in pleasing selections from song classics and special descriptive music on the famous Wurlitzer-Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra will round out an attractive program.

Educators See "Julius Caesar"

Professor Armes Gives Private Exhibition of Kleine's Big Production to Colleagues at St. Francis Hotel.

ON the evening of Nov. 27 the premier presentation of the spectacular George Kleine six-reel production, "Julius Caesar," took place in the magnificent ballroom of the St. Francis Hotel at San Francisco. The exhibition was an invitation affair arranged by Prof. William Dallam Armes of the University of California and was attended by more than three hundred professors of the State University, Stanford University, and leading schools about the Bay, together with artists and musicians of note, and was without doubt the greatest gathering of cultured folks ever assembled here to view a moving picture. Included in the assemblage were representatives of the Pacific coast branch of the American Philological Association and of the American Historical Association, and many scientific bodies.

The exhibition was prefaced by a short talk by Professor Armes, in which he promised "a real historical and educational treat." After the show was over and scene after scene had been thunderously applauded by the delighted audience Prof. Armes went further and acknowledged that he was proud to be "godfather to such a fine family of films." Another enthusiastic professor said: "It is a real regret that there are not twelve parts instead of but six. It is the most wonderful historical lesson I have ever learned and the greatest picture treat I have ever enjoyed."

The great ballroom was fitted up with an improvised projection room and the entire performance went off without a hitch. An orchestra of twelve pieces hidden behind a small forest of palms rendered appropriate musical selections.

Among the distinguished guests of Prof. Armes were Guisseppe Cadanasso, Haig Patigan, Mr. and Mrs. Maynard Dixon, Henry Hadley, Mr. and Mrs. John Britton, Theodore Vogdt, Mrs. Maurice Cutten, Mr. and Mrs. A. Roncovieri, Mr. and Mrs. J. Gottlob, John Rock, Harry Seawell and Leopold Michaels.

World Tower Tenants Organize

Under Plans Approved by Fire Department Two Floors of Adjoining Building Will Be Taken Over For Film Purposes.

IN the Court of General Sessions on Wednesday, December 16, the cases of the Fire Department against thirty-two tenants of the World's Tower Building were postponed to December 30, pending the arrangements now being made to satisfy the fire authorities. The owner of the building and the tenants are working in harmony with the Fire Department officials, and there is every reason to believe that the outcome of the recent controversy will be satisfactory to all concerned.

Forty-six film concerns having offices in the World Tower have organized the Film Trades Protective Association. The temporary officers are Lester D. Mayne, chairman, and W. L. Sheldon, secretary. The intention is to broaden the scope of the association's activities and take in firms having offices in other buildings. For the past two weeks Mr. Mayne has been working in conjunction with Edward W. Browning, the owner of the building and a fire prevention expert. Plans are now in process of execution for transforming the fifth and sixth floors of the annex building, on the east side of the World Tower, and which is connected with the main structure, into vaults, projection rooms and rewinding rooms. These plans have been approved by the Fire Department.

On the sixth floor, which is the upper one, two vaults will be constructed at the front. Each of these will contain 750 cubic feet of space and will be built of twelve-inch terra cotta block. The walls will be 18 inches in thickness on one side, 12 on another and 8 on the street side. The ventilator will be 80 square inches. These will be, so far as is known, the first public vaults to be constructed in the history of the film industry. Each tenant will have a cabinet of sufficient size to contain his holdings. For this he will pay rental, which will be devoted to the maintenance of the two floors, under the supervision of the association. Back of the vaults and divided by a hall which will run the length of the structure are ten rewinding rooms, constructed under the supervision of the Bureau of Combustibles. There will also be four shipping rooms.

On the fifth floor at the rear will be two public projection rooms. These also will be available to the trade generally. Each room will be equipped with a piano and music racks, so that if desired a picture may be put on as in a theater. There will also be easy chairs. Two rewinding rooms will also be on this floor. In the front will be built, as demands upon the association may require, two more storage vaults. No wood will be employed in the making of the alterations. Even the desks will be of steel. The projection rooms throughout the main building will not be disturbed, the only restriction being that not more than five reels of film will be permitted in an office at one time.

Au Revoir to Gasnier

His Associates of the Pathe Plant Give a Dinner on the Eve of Famous Director's Departure to Italy.

LOUIS GASNIER, for several years past principal director of productions of the Pathe American studios at Jersey City, N. J., sailed on Friday, Dec. 18, by the S.S. "La Patria," of the Fabre line, his destination being Naples, Italy. He will be away about two months, during which time he will undertake to instruct the producers of the Pathe Italian studios as to the technic of the American motion picture.

This was the reason for the gathering of a number of good fellows, associates at the Pathe studios of Mr. Gasnier, at Laloy's Cafe in West 39th street, New York, on Saturday evening, Dec. 12, where a farewell dinner was given to the departing director-in-chief. Those present were: Louis Gasnier, guest of the evening; E. A. MacManus, director of the motion picture department of the Hearst publications; Fred Beecroft, of the Dramatic Mirror; Edward Auger, J. K. Burger, Jules Burnstein, C. A. Karpen, P. A. Parsons, of the Eclectic Film Company; Ramirez Torres, Fred Davidson, J. W. Kyle, J. W. Goodfield, Henry Vernot, Charles Dupuis, J. W. Wessel, H. W. Hurst, Simon Bowman, Frank Franconi, F. W. Watney, G. Bardet, G. B. Seitz, L. W. Wharton, all of the Pathe studio; Arnold Daly, who is to be leading man in the new Pathe serial, "The Adventures of Elaine," and Miss Pearl White, the leading lady of the same series, who was accompanied by Mrs. L. W. Wharton. The Moving Picture World was represented by James L. Hoff.

A most delicious dinner was served, which was agreeably interspersed by remarks, wise and otherwise, by almost everybody present. The features of the entertainment was a song parody on "Poor Pauline" by C. A. Karpen, not to mention other poetic effusions by the same author, and a base solo by Mr. Parsons. Many of the associates of Mr. Gasnier gave testimony to their esteem for him and expressed the hope that his return would be speedy.

The party broke up at an early hour and in a most happy frame of mind.

Biograph's California Special

Entire Producing Force of the Bronx Studio Will Travel to Los Angeles in a Limited Train Leaving Dec. 30.

THE Biograph producing forces will leave New York City for Los Angeles at 10 o'clock on Wednesday, Dec. 30. There will be 125 persons in the party, which will travel on a special train to be known on the charts of the Lackawanna and the Santa Fe Railroad as the Biograph Special. The combination of twelve cars will have all the rights of a limited train, traveling on its own time. There will be six Pullmans, a club car and a dining car, as well as four seventy-foot baggage cars. In the latter will be the property and scenery which it is believed will be essential to carry the company through a six months picture-making campaign in sunny California. The whole train will be brought on to Hoboken from Chicago by the Santa Fe, so as to avoid the necessity of changing cars in the Lake City, and making possible the entire trip without change of conveyance.

The four baggage cars will be shipped to One Hundred and Forty-ninth street and the Harlem River on a float, where they will be loaded. For weeks the wardrobe force of the Bronx studio has been busy tabulating the garments and gowns, many of them expensive, preparatory to packing in great chests, so that a record and valuation may be obtained for the contents of each car. The producing force also has been hard at work, getting ahead of the regular releases, which now as a minimum are 6,000 feet a week. As the trip to the Coast will consume practically a week and another will be involved in shipping the negative back to New York a transcontinental journey for the entire producing force involves a flat loss of two weeks' time on the releasing schedule. It will be necessary to work all night for the forty-eight hours preceding the departure, so that when the last "Strike" is sounded from the directors the trucks will be at the door.

En route the editorial forces will be at work getting manuscripts in shape. Rehearsals will be conducted by the directors. It is possible several stops may be made for the taking of pictures. In Los Angeles the company is building two additional stages. It is the custom of the Biograph to maintain in the West only sufficient laboratory force to prepare for shipment to the factory in New York a complete negative and one positive print of each subject.

The trip will be a record-breaker in many respects. Nothing approaching it in magnitude has been attempted by a film manufacturer heretofore.

Many applications have been made for the privilege of renting the eastern studios during the absence of the company, but these have all been declined. It is intended to thoroughly overhaul the entire producing plant during the winter and spring.

AL LICHTMAN WITH THE WORLD FILM.

Whenever one hears of some new, big idea, he is apt to wonder why it hadn't been thought of before. The World Film Corporation's idea of "features made from well-known plays by well-known stars" has been taking very well with all the advertising and artistic possibilities that go with it and it seemed pretty complete. Al Lichtman has added to it a scheme that rounds it out and the new half seems so inevitable that one wonders why it wasn't apparent all along. He is now general manager of the Special Attractions Department of the World Film Corporation and is going to pay attention to that part of the moving picture business where the great star and great play idea would not be so applicable as an idea that may be roughly stated as "special features especially treated." If an offering is bought that needs, for instance, a lecturer, it will be sent out with the right lecturer; if a picture will be worth while if special music is written to follow it all through, that picture will go out with that music and an orchestra also to play the music. The organization of the new department has been in working shape and the field will be especially canvassed for complete shows instead of mere reels. Every picture will be a new problem to Mr. Lichtman, but if any one can be found who has the ability to carry this idea through, that one is the new General Manager of the Special Attractions Department.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

WASHINGTON CITY LEAGUE URGES CO-OPERATION.

Crandall, Morgan and Stonesifer Point Out In Letter to Exhibitors that Concerted Action Is Necessary to Combat Detrimental Legislation.

THE need for organization in the District of Columbia is being felt more than ever in view of existing conditi and with several very important matters, needing co-operation of all of the exhibitors, in mind, Harry M. Crandall, Joseph P. Morgan and Victor H. Stonesifer have addressed a circular letter to every moving picture exhibitor in the District of Columbia, making a plea for active membership. The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia has been in existence since 1911, the letter reads, and during that period has been accomplishing much for the benefit of all concerned. Much more could have been done if there had been unanimity of action among all of the exhibitors, but for some reason, which they are unable to fathom, some of the exhibitors have failed to affiliate, and others, while holding membership, have, in plain words, failed to do their share.

"Inasmuch as restrictions of a harmful nature to the moving picture business are constantly being urged in the form of radical legislation and unjust regulations, which require concerted action to prevent, it is absolutely necessary that we present a united front," states the letter. "In an endeavor to learn what objection there may be on the part of the exhibitors to organization as at present constituted, its aims and objects, and to get your opinion as to the best means of guarding against the imminent danger of Sunday closing legislation this present session of Congress, we submit the questions herewith inclosed. Frank and full answers are urgently requested, with the positive assurance that they will be considered as confidential by the undersigned officers of the league.

"Now, Brother Exhibitor, the future of the organization and the growth and development of your business and our business depend upon your co-operation. Reckless competition among ourselves, together with the unwise policy of attempting to stand alone against combinations in other branches of the business with which we are compelled to deal, have worked great harm. But it is not irreparable. Taken in time, we may yet place the industry upon the high plane it occupies in other cities, with resultant benefit to you and to us. Your money is invested, and good business judgment dictates that you use every honorable means to protect it. Your interest is identical to ours; therefore, we must unite to protect that interest. Too many evidences are at hand in other trades, professions and business to doubt that efficient organization for a common goal is not only beneficial, but imperative. But it requires your ACTIVE participation and counsel. 'A chain is no stronger than its weakest link.' You do not want to be that 'weakest link,' we are sure. Let us prove that we are intelligent, progressive business men, with sufficient ability and energy to grasp the constantly changing conditions of the moving picture industry, and that we are forceful enough to vigorously protest against aggression and discrimination."

Accompanying the letter was a sheet containing a number of questions to be answered by the individual exhibitor: "Do you believe in co-operation? Do you think any benefit can be derived by exhibitors standing together to adjust grievances? Do you think our present organization a good one? If not, state reasons. Are the present league officers satisfactory to you? Are you in favor of reorganization? Do you think the time is ripe for a thorough and complete organization? Have you any grievance against exchanges? Do you believe posters should be furnished free by exchanges? Do you believe organized protest can accomplish more than individual protest? Do you know that Washington is giving more for less than any city in the country? Are you in favor of a limited number of reels for 5 cents? Are you satisfied with present local conditions? Do you think we can continue to prosper under the present 'every-man-for-himself' conditions? Do you realize that everything is going up in the moving picture industry except the price of admission? Do you know that manufacturers and exchanges are combining for mutual benefit and protection? Do you know that organized exhibitors have accomplished much in other cities? What are your views in regard to a higher price of admission? Do you believe the price of features at $10 per reel is too high? Do you think a reduction can be secured except by combined effort? Do you know of any large industry that is not efficiently organized? Could the price of legitimate theatrical attractions be kept at $2 were it not for combination? Would you like a league official to call on you and discuss the matter? Do you believe Sunday closing would benefit your business? What would be the best time to call a mass meeting of exhibitors —day or night and hour?"

Surely this form sheet contains everything that will show whether or not organization is desired. Yet it is an even money bet that the exhibitors will consign both letter and sheet to the wastebasket and continue their street corner discussions as to how the business is going to the bow-wows; how Bill Smith, a competitor, is showing eight for a nickel, and John Jones is giving away his profits by country store methods and other cheap gags to attract attention. It is time for the exhibitors of Washington to wake up; to form an organization and if they are jealous of officers present or future get busy and hire a couple of lawyers to transact their business and preside at their meetings for them—but get busy and organize.

There are a number of important restrictions facing the exhibitors of the District of Columbia—increased taxation through the abolition of the present so-called organic act under which the Federal government pays half of the expense of the District of Columbia, which means that taxes will be nearer $30 than $15 per thousand; Federal and local censorship; Sunday closing, and many drastic regulations which will take away from the business all possibilities of profit.

CLARENCE L. LINZ.

EXHIBITORS AND EXCHANGEMEN MEET.

Detroit Picture Men Discuss Length of Shows—Decide to Give Three Reels for Five Cents With Some Exceptions.

ABOUT forty members of the Detroit Exhibitors' League and leading exchange men met at the club rooms in the Equity building, Detroit, Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 8, to take up the important question of three and five reels. For some time there have been a number of small houses on the east side of the city who have been trying to see who could give the most films for the money. On Gratiot avenue, the Colonial and the Jewell theaters have been fighting each other, and three houses on Hastings street have also been overstepping the understanding on this question. Attempts have been made to settle the "bone of contention," but without result up to the time of the above-mentioned meeting.

As soon as the exhibitors assembled, Secretary Orth announced the purpose of the meeting and asked for views from those present. Some argued that the fault lies in the exchangemen selling them, others said the association would never be able to get all the members to live up to the rule; one exhibitor favored three and six reels; in fact, arguments along these lines continued about an hour with absolutely no headway; as for the exchangemen, they would not commit themselves, as they felt it was a matter which the exhibitors themselves should agree on. Some one moved that the exchangemen retire from the room, so that the exhibitors could talk the thing over in private. The motion carried and the exchangemen filed out.

Hot arguments among the exhibitors again ensued and lasted for forty minutes. Finally, the proprietor, Ben Cohen, of the Colonial, said: "If Mr. Klatt, owner of the Jewell, will give only three reels, we will do the same." Dr. Klatt agreed and that ended the matter. Everything is now running smooth in all sections of the city, except on Hastings street, in the Ghetto district, where three houses are still at "war" on this question of three and five reels.

In connection with this matter of reels, a leading exchangeman, in talking with the correspondent of the Moving Picture World, said after the meeting was over: "The exchangemen have tried to do all they can to bring about uniformity on the number of reels that exhibitors should give for five and ten cents. But there are a number of outlaw film exchanges which operate in Detroit and which will sell a man a dozen reels for five cents. If the leading exchanges should refuse to sell that exhibitor, the other exhibitors instead of backing them up will go ahead and buy films themselves from these outlaw exchanges. In other words, the exhibitors ask the exchanges to help them carry out this three and five-reel proposition, but in turn they do not 'stand pat' and co-operate with the exchanges who stand by them. The fact cannot be denied that a theater showing more than five reels for a nickel is giving reels of inferior grade, because he could not make money at five good reels for five cents.

"The result is that when a person goes into that show and finds out that the pictures are below the standard, he immediately starts to condemn all picture houses and gets the idea that motion pictures are on the downward path. It is an absolute mistake to try to educate the public in expecting to get more than three reels for five cents. A house would do itself a whole lot more good by giving three of the best reels it can for five cents, instead of three fair reels and two poor ones for five cents.

"The film exchanges want to do anything they can that will help the industry, because in the long run it means more business for them, but first of all, the exhibitors themselves must get together and be educated on the right way of doing things."

WAR TAX CLOSES SEVERAL KENTUCKY THEATERS.

The new war tax of from $25 to $100 on moving picture houses has put a number of small houses throughout Eastern and Central Kentucky out of business, according to some of the traveling film representatives and film exchange managers of Louisville. Several theaters in isolated sections of Tennessee and West Virginia have also been closed for the time being. In Kentucky theaters have been closed at Morehead, Burgin, Sadieville, Liberty, besides one of the two at Hazard and several in the mountain district. The class of houses closed are those seating up to 150 persons or the theaters which come under the $25 classification. The larger houses have paid their taxes and are going right ahead. A number of these small houses which seat only 100 to 150 persons are in the habit of running but two nights a week, and after paying expenses a very little margin of profit is left, especially in the winter time, and some of them would probably close during the winter months even if there was no war tax to pay. The local film men do not take the proposition seriously and are not at all worried over the matter. These houses are expected to open a little later on or in the spring, anyway.

ORGANIZER W. A. CORY COMPLETES SUCCESSFUL TRIP.

Organizer and Secretary W. A. Cory, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of California, has rendered a report covering his recent trip through California, south of San Francisco. On this journey, which was made by automobile, he visited most of the places of any size and secured seventy-three new members to the league, about one-half of these being in Los Angeles. Many others signified their willingness to join the organization, and the trip is considered a great success. It is now planned to canvass Northern California and to make efforts to increase the membership in the San Francisco Bay section.

HARRISBURG CONVENTION POSTPONED.

After a conference on November 30 with United States Senator Penrose who promised his aid to a delegation of picture men representing the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Pennsylvania in their fight against the Pennsylvania state censorship, the exhibitors at the suggestion of the senator decided to postpone the date of their proposed convention at Harrisburg from January 4, 5 and 6, 1915, to the 26th, 27th and 28th of that month.

Pennsylvania League Ball Successful.

Clara Kimball Young's Portrait Sold For Red Cross Benefit—Dittenfass Secures Picture—Many Photoplayers Present.

DESPITE the inclemency of the weather, the third annual ball of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Pennsylvania, which took place in Horticultural Hall, Broad and Locust streets, Philadelphia, on December 8, it is asserted, was one of the most successful entertainments ever given by that organization from every standpoint. It is estimated that more than one thousand persons were in attendance, who one and all endorsed it as "the best ever."

One of the features of the evening was the presentation of a handsome oil painting of Clara Kimball Young to the Exhibitors League by Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president of the World Film Corporation, of New York. It was suggested that the painting be auctioned off and the proceeds given to the Red Cross Society, and this suggestion was immediately approved by the officers. The bidding became fast and furious at first, but as the price went up dollar by dollar one after another of the bidders was slowly forced into the background. When the bidders had been narrowed down to seven, Lubin, Laemmle and Dittenfass decided to pool their interests. However, Abe Einstein of the Stanley company refused to either go into the syndicate or be "froze out," but finally after much spirited bidding between the men, the painting was obtained by the syndicate for sixty dollars.

The new owners then tossed a coin to see who would secure possession of Miss Young's portrait, and Dame Fortune chose to favor Mr. Dittenfass. The painting stood five feet high and two and a half feet wide. While the bidding was in progress Miss Young stood alongside the painting and was showered with money, which was also placed in the Red Cross Fund.

A twenty-five piece orchestra furnished music a-plenty for the occasion, and kept the crowd in a lively mood until the dancing began at ten o'clock.

Scattered in the great crowd on the dance floor were notables who are known around the globe, and yet still others who fought shoulder to shoulder when the motion picture was the object of whole pages in the comic supplements and when it was ridiculed by the public at large as a plaything and a toy and made it what it is to-day. The most prominent figure on the dance floor during the evening was Sigmund Lubin, who surprised every one present by doing a remarkable one-step. To Mr. Lubin is due a great portion of the credit for the success of the affair, as practically the entire Lubin company was in attendance.

Great credit must also be given to the committee of arrangements for their untiring efforts to make this year's ball excel those previously held by the exhibitors, and it must be said the ball exceeded their highest expectations. The committee was made up of the following: Jay Emanuel, chairman, and Nat Fischer, James Pollon, William Crozier, Michael J. Walsh, David R. Sablosky and Jay Emanuel.

Among the notables present at the ball were Ormi Hawley, Romaine Fielding, Clara Kimball Young, Vivian Martin, Robert Warwick, Edwin August, Edgar Jones, Lottie Briscoe, Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Edmund Breese, Sigmund Lubin, Lewis J. Selznick, Carl Laemmle and Mark Dittenfass.

SUNSET M. P. CO. IN WORLD TOWER.

M. E. Cory, general manager of the Sunset Motion Picture Co., of San Francisco, has opened offices in suite 401, 110 West 40th street, New York, from which to handle the "Rescue of the Stefansson Arctic Expedition."

This is one of the greatest pictures ever released, being an excellent story of the Stefansson Expedition and the rescue of the survivors of the wrecked "Karluk." It is dramatic as well as educational and historical.

The Sunset company is new in the field. It is composed entirely of San Franciscans and its directorate and stockholders include such well-known men as U. S. Senator Jas. D. Phelan, Herbert Fleischhacker and C. L. Smith, prominent bankers; Chas. K. Field, editor of "Sunset" magazine; J. H. Henry, capitalist and one of California's wealthiest men; Judge B. V. Sargent, of the Superior Court; Max Schmidt, president, Schmidt Lithograph Co.; C. J. Parks, a prominent attorney; J. C. Wheeler, Jr., capitalist, and Mrs. Phoebe A. Hearst.

If the following releases keep the pace set by the "Stefansson Rescue," the success of the Sunset company is assured.

Alleged Swindler Captured

Moving Picture World Item Leads to Capture of Man Who is Believed to Have Defrauded Theatre Managers.

FOR some time past a man giving the names of C. H. Rose and E. A. Boehm has been traveling through the middle west claiming to represent the Great Northern Manufacturing Company of Chicago, for the sale of dinner sets. Complaints have been made to the Great Northern and to the Moving Picture World, inferring that the man was doing a straight business. The Great Northern Manufacturing Company has advised all inquirers that the man is a fraud and that no one by the name given was in their employ. The Moving Picture World printed a discription of this party and a warning to exhibitors to beware of him.

Nothing further was heard of Rose, alias Boehm for several weeks but this last week our mail brought the information that a man answering the discription published in The World had been detained at Harriman, Tenn. The Moving Picture World correspondent writes that Rose or Boehm was arrested on Tuesday, December 8, at the instance of W. C. Scott, proprietor of the Edsonia theatre of that city and charged with obtaining money under false pretenses.

According to the story the party presented his scheme to Mr. Scott who liked it and gave the man a check for 20 per cent. of the order. When Scott related the particulars of the transaction to his operator, Oswald L. Filmore, and described the man, Filmore remembered the warning he had read in The Moving Picture World and told Mr. Scott of his suspicions. The warning notice was hunted up and then Mr. Scott decided to have the man arrested.

A search made of Rose at the police station revealed laundry marks on his linen in the name "E. A. Boehm," while letters in his pockets bore the name of "C. H. Rose." Chief West, of the Harriman police department, communicated with the Great Northern Manufacturing Company of Chicago, in whose name the fraudulent transactions had been made and was told that a witness would be sent by that company to assist in the prosecution of Rose. An order book was found in the possession of Rose which contained the following list:

A total of twenty-nine houses, and $446.00 collected in about one month.

When "Rose-Boehm" was arraigned in the police court the magistrate held him to await the arrival of the representative of the Great Northern Company. A hearing was held on December 16, particulars of which will be published later.

EDWARD ABELES IN "AFTER FIVE."

Edward Abeles has been re-engaged by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company to star in the release entitled "After Five," which is announced for January 28th. "After Five" is by Wm. C. and Cecil B. De Mille, and work on the film began last week.

SCHMID DOES BOSWORTH PUBLICITY.

Pete "Grid" Schmid, for the past year associated with The Billboard, has become connected with the Publicity Department of Bosworth, Inc., who have just opened New York offices in the Candler Building. Pete will act as assistant to Julian M. Solomon, Jr.

Essanay Signs Charles Chaplin

George K. Spoor Authorizes the Announcement That G. M. Anderson Has Signature of Famous Comedian.

THE announcement was made in New York on Monday evening, Dec. 14, by George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, that Charles Chaplin, famous screen comedian, had signed with his company. The information was contained in a telegram from G. M. Anderson from Niles, Cal.

Mr. Chaplin in a remarkably short time has created for himself a unique position in the film world. He is a man who seldom gives one an opportunity to laugh with him; at the same time he gives occasion aplenty to laugh at him. The name of the director under whom he will work has not been announced, but it is assumed that he will be under the general direction of Mr. Anderson at the Niles studio, situated near San Francisco.

CHICAGO MANUFACTURERS IN NEW YORK.

The three Chicago licensed manufacturers—George Kleine, George K. Spoor and William M. Selig—were in town on Tuesday, December 15, and were present at the press showing of George Kleine's American production of "Officer 666" at the Candler Theater.

There was a good sized audience at the Candler when the picture was thrown on the screen at 11 o'clock. Every one seemed heartily to enjoy the adaptation of the famous comedy.

MISS PICKFORD HAS NOT SIGNED NEW CONTRACT.

There have been rumors in the film trade the past few days that Miss Mary Pickford had signed a contract with the New York Motion Picture Corporation. Several trade papers have announced that Miss Pickford had signed with the New York. That negotiations have been under way between the officials of the producing firm and the actress and have been for several days is known. At the time the Moving Picture World goes to press on Thursday evening no contract had been signed by Miss Pickford with the New York Motion Picture Corporation. This is on the authority of President Kessel of the company. He declined to go into any particulars, simply stating that if and when Miss Pickford affixes her signature to a contract with his company due and formal notice will be given to the trade.

WORLD FILM APPOINTS NEW MANAGERS.

George J. Beihoff, who has been transferred managing the Philadelphia office of the World Film Corporation, has been transferred to the Indianapolis branch. His record as a branch manager in Philadelphia was of the highest, and his assignment to the Indianapolis office is a result of the good work he did in Philadelphia.

W. W. Kulp has been appointed manager of the Cleveland branch of the World Film Corporation, and H. E. Stahler, former manager of the Warners Features, Inc., in Dallas, Texas, has been placed in charge of the Atlanta branch of the World Film Corporation. Mr. Stahler is an experienced motion picture man and is very well known in the South.

C. L. McVey has recently been placed in charge of the Kansas City branch of the World Film Corporation and will devote himself to handling the business in the Southwestern district.

Sales Director C. R. Seelye is doing missionary work in connection with the new plans of the World Film Corporation, while Assistant General Manager Arthur S. Kane is making a trip through the South. His objective point is Dallas, Texas, where he will devote some time to investigations of conditions in Texas. When his work in that district is completed, he will start for St. Louis. Central District Manager W. R. Scates has returned to Chicago after a visit to the branches in his district.

"THE TOLL OF MAMMON" ON MOSS CIRCUIT.

The M. & W. Feature Film Company announces that it has booked its subject, "The Toll of Mammon," over the Moss Circuit. The first presentation will be at the house at 86th street and Broadway, New York, beginning Monday, Dec. 21, for a three days' run.

WHERE IS V. M. JENKINS?

Some time ago the manager of the Montreal Branch of the Picture Playhouse Film Co., Vernon M. Jenkins, left without saying good-bye to anybody, and the home office would be very glad, indeed, to know where he is, as they have several things they want to tell him.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

Aesthetic Censorship of Films and Other Things.

THE women of Chicago are interesting themselves in pictures these days in a militant way—not in an inimicable manner, but rather with a motive to remedy certain evils in the production of pictured subjects. We have, for example, Mrs. Wm. Penhallow Henderson holding forth on aesthetic osculation and censorship, and Mary Moncure Parker demanding reform, in various other respects, in the production of moving pictures.

The other day, before the Drama League of Chicago, Mrs. Henderson condemned a kissing scene in a certain film as being not only "badly done," but "tawdry." The scene was a "cut out" exhibited before members of the League by Major Funkhouser, showing a wife being kissed by "the other man." Right here directors of production and the people engaged in kissing scenes in moving pictures are requested to stand up and take notice of Mrs. Henderson's opinion and advice.

"I do not propose to pose as an expert on kissing," said Mrs. Henderson. "However, it should be treated as seriously as many other subjects. The best way to express my opinion on the subject of proper kissing is to use the word 'restraint.'

"Restraint is used in art and in many other things. The scene showing a man kissing another man's wife would have been just as vulgar if the wife had been kissing her husband. There is taste in everything, and the relationship between the two principals in the affair was of minor importance.

"So far as the censorship of moving picture films is concerned, I believe we should have an aesthetic censorship. This would establish a better basis for improving the films. An excellent idea would be the appointment of a citizens' committee with power to give its approval to all films. In this way the bad films would disappear automatically, and we would have a positive method of censorship. Censorship based on moral grounds alone is futile."

In all seriousness this matter of kissing in moving pictures should be carefully considered by directors. One is sometimes positively disgusted by the excessive, vulgar kissing scenes shown in some films. Just look at the cover of the last issue of "Cosmopolitan" and study the kissing scene there! How many of these good ladies have taken the pains to write letters of condemnation of that scene to the editor?

Mary Moncure Parker wonders if there is any connection between the increase in crime and moving pictures; blandly assuming that there is an increase in crime without any showing of statistics. She puts a ban on "thrillers"—Such as "explosions, wild beast episodes, train wrecks, airship disasters, skyscraper plunges, etc." What about the literature, so widely current, which boys and girls are permitted to devour in secret?

Every one with a spare moment, who can write or speak a sentence properly, seems to make a target of moving pictures, forgetting that evolution is a slow process, but certain and true nevertheless.

Pessimism never yet has reformed any one or anything.

Strict Enforcement of Fire Prevention Ordinance.

The coroner's investigation of the fatal fire in the smoker of an outward bound Burlington train, within the city limits, on Nov. 24, supposedly due to the ignition and explosion of moving picture films, has been postponed until Dec. 19, owing to the failure of the train crew to attend the inquest. Mayor Henry S. Rich and Frank L. Poulteny, of Berwyn, were fatally injured and a score of others were cut or bruised in the accident.

John C. McDonnell, chief of the fire prevention bureau, as a precautionary measure, has sent out the following letter to film exchanges and others concerned:

"In view of the recent fire in this city, possibly due to the ignition of films in transit, this letter is written to call your attention to Article XV, Section 229, of the Fire Prevention and Public Safety Ordinance, which provides in part that films be stored or handled only in 'individual metal cans or metal boxes of galvanized iron having tight-fitting covers.'

"You are strictly cautioned against delivering or 'handing out' films to any person in any manner or form other than in cans or boxes as indicated above."

For the benefit of Chicago exchanges and exhibitors, who will be held strictly responsible for any violation of Section 229, the text is given here in full.

It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation keeping or using any motion picture films within the City of Chicago to store the same in any other manner than by depositing such films in individual tin cans or metal boxes of galvanized iron having tight-fitting covers, which shall be at all times, when not in use, stored in fireproof vaults or safes. All such persons, firms or corporations shall strictly comply with the following provisions:

Not exceeding twenty motion picture films shall be permitted to be exposed on counters or shelves while the same are being inspected or examined by employes, purchasers or customers, or are being handled in the filling of orders.

Not exceeding five motion picture films shall be kept or stored in any operating room where motion pictures are being produced by means of motion picture machines and devices, and such films shall at all times, except while being changed on the motion picture machine or device, be kept within the aforesaid tin cans or metal boxes of galvanized iron.

Who Is Sue?

In the contest of ballots to find the prettiest girl in Chicago and, incidentally, to furnish Essanay with an actress to play the part of "Sue" in a forthcoming photoplay, it was found impractical to select the forty girls by Dec. 11, as was stated in my last letter. The time has been extended until Tuesday, Dec. 22, at 6:00 p. m.

On that night the judges, headed by Lorado Taft, will make their selections, and the pictures of the forty girls chosen in the preliminary contest will appear in the Herald on Sunday, Dec. 27.

Beginning Monday, Dec. 28, a coupon will be printed in the Herald daily and Sunday. The coupon published on week days will entitle the holder to five votes for his or her favorite, and the one printed in a Sunday issue will be good for thirty votes.

The time allowed for balloting will be announced later, and the girl who receives the greatest number of votes in the allotted period will be "Sue."

The "Herald Movies" staff has completed its preliminary work and now awaits the time when the forty girls in the preliminary contest are named. The camera men of the "Herald Movies" will then take pictures of the forty girls, and they will be flashed on the screen in hundreds of theaters in Chicago and vicinity.

Photographs, with the name and address of the candidate on each, must be forwarded to the Photoplay Editor of the Herald, an before six o'clock p. m., Tuesday, Dec. 22.

Municipal Moving Pictures For Chicago?

Municipal dances have taken root in Chicago and give promise of flourishing. Now the Municipal Welfare Bureau has under consideration plans for municipal moving pictures, which, it is intended, will be shown during the hour preceding municipal dances. It is claimed that the pictures will induce the elderly folks and parents to interest themselves in the city dances, which the young people patronize.

It must not be thought that these municipal dances are free. Up to the present they have resulted in a profit to the city of $240, so Mayor Harrison has ordered a reduction in the admission price. In the future admission will be 15 cents for one and 25 cents for two, which will also include checking service. Free dancing instruction is another feature of the city dances.

Chicago Film Brevities.

George Magie, of the Universal, has had in mind for some time past a plan to provide a special projection room in which Universal patrons could see Universal films run off under the best possible conditions. Quarters have been secured in Suite 303-05 Brady Building, 109 N. Dearborn St., and in a few weeks the projection room, well ventilated and up-to-date in equipment, will be in readiness to give private presentations to the trade and press of Universal films exclusively.

A private presentation of "The Carpet from Bagdad," Selig's five-reel feature adapted from Harold McGrath's celebrated novel of that name, was given in the Selig private projection room on Friday, Dec. 11, before an audience of prominent literary people who had been specially invited for the occasion. There were present Clara Louise Burnham, novelist; Mrs. Maud Radford Warren, novelist; Mr. and Mrs. Ray Long, editors of the Red Book; Mr. and Mrs. Rice Burroughs (Mr. Rice Burroughs is the famous author of "Tarzan of the Apes"); Lawrence Chambers, of the Bobbs-Merrill Co.; Gilson Willets, author of "The Adventures of Kathlyn"; Robert Eastman and editorial staff of the J. R. Hall Printing Co., and Mr. Hatrick, of the International News. The presentation created great enthusiasm and congratulations were showered on Mr. Selig and the producing company.

F. Hawley, formerly auditor of the Motion Picture Patents Co., was in the city last week from New York and made a short stay.

C. A. Conley, joint owner with Messrs. Fitzpatrick and McElroy of the Barrison Theater, Waukegan, Ill., called at this office last week. Mr. Conley reported very good business with Universal programs. Six reels of pictures are shown for 10 cents. The Barrison is a modern house, seating 700 people. Mr. Conley formerly owned the Majestic Theater in La Salle, Ill.

Women ushers in Chicago theaters were vindicated last week by the judiciary committee of the city council, when the members placed on file an amendment to the code, which, if passed by the council, would have thrown them out of employment. There was not a dissenting vote. It will be remembered that in an item in my last letter, Assistant Fire Marshal John C. McDonnell, head of the fire prevention bureau, recommended that women ushers in theaters should be replaced by men, because they could not be depended on in case of a fire.

"Damon and Pythias," Universal's six-reel photoplay, made a big hit at the Fine Arts Theater last week. It is the intention to extend the run until the resumption of dramatic attractions at this house, in the middle of January. This fine subject has been much discussed by patrons, and the prevailing attitude is one of praise and appreciation.

E. B. Rice, owner of the Seeley Theater, 2042 Roscoe Blvd., and of the Hamlin Theater, 2051 Belmont Ave., this city, called on us last week and renewed his subscription for the Moving Picture World. Mr. Rice manages the Seeley while his wife manages the Hamlin. Each house seats 300 people and six reels of pictures are run on Saturdays and Sundays for 10 cents admission. On other days of the week three-reel programs are offered for five cents. The Seeley runs Licensed programs and Universal is used in the Hamlin. "The Adventures of Kathlyn," "The Million Dollar Mystery," "Trey O' Hearts" and other serials have been shown at both houses to good business, the first mentioned bringing the highest box office receipts.

The Tribune Belgian war pictures closed a prosperous run of four weeks at the Studebaker on Saturday, Dec. 12.

The Chicago Examiner came out with its first announcement of the presentation of the Hearst-Selig Moving Picture History of the world's greatest war in five reels, in the issue of Monday, Dec. 14. These war pictures will be shown in the best theaters of the city, it is announced.

David Saul Klafter, architect of the Home Theater, which collapsed about two years ago, has been made defendant in a suit for $25,000 damages brought by the owners of the building, Mr. and Mrs. Raphael Goldstein. They claim this sum represents loss sustained by the alleged faulty construction of the building. It was stated in these columns, some considerable time ago, that Mr. Klafter was exonerated by the state board of architects, after a long investigation.

Moving picture "thrift plays" are the latest brand of films sought for. The Illinois Bankers Association is responsible for the new type of photoplay, which has for its object the stimulation of the saving habit in men and women. In a circular letter mailed to all members of the association, Secretary Richard L. Crampton has urged co-operation between bankers and moving picture theater owners in local communities, with the view of having exhibited those plays which demonstrate the happy results of thrift.

Frank Marvin, business agent of Local No. 157, Moving Picture Operators Union, denied one day last week that his organization had lost its charter. Mr. Marvin explained that the report came from Philadelphia, and that it was fathered by a rival union. He says that his organization has letters from the officers of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers showing that Local No. 157 has been officially recognized by the American Federation of Labor.

The use of motion pictures of law-making bodies in action, at night schools in this city, to educate the 10,000 applicants who will shortly be seeking citizenship here, is being considered by Judge Clarence N. Goodnow, who hears the naturalization examinations in the Superior Court; by Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, superintendent of schools, and C. T. Schwartz, chairman of the committee on naturalization of the City Club. It has been suggested that moving pictures of both houses of congress, of city councils, and similar bodies would give the immigrant a clearer idea of the workings of the government than he could get otherwise. The co-operation of Louis F. Post, assistant secretary of the Department of Labor, has been asked.

A private exhibition to the trade and press of Eclectic's seven-reel, colored feature subject, "The Life of Our Savior," was given at E. E. Fulton's private exhibition rooms, 154 W. Lake street, this city, on Monday morning, Dec. 14. John Hardin, Chicago manager of Eclectic, believes that he has in this fine subject a magnificent attraction for exhibitors at this season of the year. The beauties of the Eclectic natural color process in these films command unstinted praise. The fine pictorial views, the finished and dignified acting and the manner of telling the sacred story combine to make this feature a memorable one.

Mrs. Alfred Hamburger, wife of Alfred Hamburger, formerly president of the Celebrated Players Film Co., is at present working out a scheme for a moving picture educational program for children, from the kindergarten to the high school. Mrs. Hamburger will include industrial, geographical and historical subjects in her plan. She was the first Chicago woman to establish the Montessori system of education in her home, and both her children are being educated in this manner.

Wallace Berry, well known by thousands as the "Sweedie" in Essanay's eastern comedy films, has joined the ranks of the "legits" for a few days. He is at present playing the leading role in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" at the Imperial Theater, this city, until a new leading man is engaged. The former leading man is in the hospital and, until another is engaged, Wallace Berry is playing his part ata the urgent solicitation of his brother, who is a member of the company.

SCREEN CLUB HOLDS BEEFSTEAK DINNER.

The Screen Club held its first beefsteak dinner on the evening of Saturday, December 12. It was about 11 o'clock when 114 members and guests sat down to a well served meal in the annex dining room. Joe Farnham was toastmaster, and he kept things humming. There were speeches and stories by President Kirkwood, Maclyn Arbuckle, Paul Scardon, Harry Ennis, Harry Reichenbach, King Baggot, Ben Wilson, Cameron Smith, Daniel Bertona and Frank Manning among others. So, too, there were bits from professional entertainers, all of which was heartily enjoyed. It was late when the gathering broke up. The affair was so successful it is probable there will be other similar festivities at stated intervals.

EDNA LUBY SUES UNIVERSAL.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company and the Eclair Film Company are named as joint defendants in an action on file in the United States District Court to recover $50,000 damages for alleged infringement of the copyright to the drama entitled "The Crucial Moment." The complainant, Edna Luby, alleges the defendant produced a photoplay burlesquing a scene in the drama, and she charges that the alleged attempt to present a farcical portrayal of her production has reduced the value of the production on the stage to the extent of $50,000.

The film companies have not filed formal answers to the suit yet, but representatives of the companies deny that the photoplay was produced to burlesque the serious dialogue between the burglar and his wife, which forms a climatic situation in the drama.

MISS LA BADIE IN NEW SERIES.

The million admirers Florence La Badie gained for herself while playing in the "Million Dollar Mystery" will be delighted to learn of an opportunity to renew their screen acquaintance with the exquisite French-Canadian actress. She soon is to appear on the Mutual program in a two-reel Thanhouser feature called "Under False Colors." This is to be the first of a series of strong, dramatic pictures in which Miss La Badie is to play the leads. Her work in the serial mentioned above, while it served to emphasize that girlish grace and charm which always has been hers, proved also that the little actress has a forceful dramatic instinct all her own. She has nerve, too, and there has yet to appear a risk she will not take on sight for the sake of making a picture good. No wonder her followers are a loyal lot.

Doings at Los Angeles

RAIN, intermittent, and in gentle showers and then in torrents, has kept producers on the jump to get their pictures made while the sun shone. The past two weeks have been spent in dodging the drizzle, but just the same every one wears a smile. The air is mildly laden with frost, but that is just enough to put a tingle in one's blood. At the beaches many people still go swimming, so you can see that winter here is not so bad after all.

Our injured director, J. P. McGowan of the Kalem, is slowly improving at the hospital, but his physicians fear that he will be confined to bed and later a chair for at least six months, and his complete recovery is doubtful.

Dorothy Gish, the Mutual actress who was painfully injured when she was struck by an automobile, is recovering nicely and hopes to be back on earth in another month. She will not be able to return to the studio for several weeks after she is allowed to walk around.

The crisis was passed in the siege against typhoid-pneumonia which Ford Sterling was waging with his great constitution, and now the popular comedian is past danger, but he looks rather battleworn, for he lost close to 22 pounds in the fight for his life. He will be out again in a few weeks and back to work.

Helen Holmes heads the list of photoplayers having bad colds, she having come near being seriously ill with pneumonia. Many other screen people are suffering from the sudden climatic changes and overheating in their work, which gave them severe colds. Otherwise the hub of production is all right.

Herbert Brenon is completing "The Heart of Maryland," with Mrs. Leslie Carter in the leading role. Sunday he will do the big battle scenes at the church with 1,000 people. Joseph Engle, general manager of the Tiffany firm, will go east with the finished film in about a week.

The Famous Players are busy at the Oz studio doing "The Pretty Sister of Jose" with Marguerite Clark in the title role. Allan Dwan is the director. Al Kaufman, studio manager of this company, said that he was delighted with California, this being his first trip west. He also stated that the studio would be busy all the time for the next quarter, and possibly more time would be spent here. He may stay all winter, but if Adolph Zukor comes west, he will go back for a few weeks. Incidentally he told of stars to come here, mentioning Marie Doro, John Barrymore, John Mason, and others who will be featured on this program. Mary Pickford and James Kirkwood, her director, will arrive in a few days to start work.

Even if the rain blots out the sun here, there is one man who can see the bright rays, and that is Spottiswoode Aitkin of the Mutual, for in his home there is happiness for Frances took the blue ribbon at the baby show held this week in Pasadena.

Nance O'Neil has arrived and is comfortably located in a downtown hotel awaiting her start in films at the Tiffany studio under the direction of Herbert Brenon. The vehicle for her has not yet been chosen, but it will be a well known feature story. When this picture is completed, some time late in January, the company will leave for its eastern plant, which will be arranged by Mr. Engle when he goes back with the films.

The Crown City Film Co., located on a 2½-acre city ranch in Pasadena, is doing big things at its lively studio. A big 80 ft. x 80 ft. stage has been erected and a 40 x 60 tile fireproof laboratory building is under construction. It will also house the projection room, film vault, and other spaces. They have already completed 14 reels of comedy and drama, and are working steadily on more. Their brands are Paragon and Thistle, the former being drama, directed by Donald McDonald, and the latter comedy with Bruce Mitchell producing. The principals in the drama company are Dorothy Davenport and Lee Hill, while the funmakers are Frank Woods and Rena Rogers. The firm is made up of well known Pasadena men and they are going ahead with the plant, intending to make it one of the finest in the south. The officers are: M. Spero, president; F. A. Ryan, vice-president; D. E. Bard, secretary; H. A. Parker, treasurer, and R. D. Sorver, auditor. The studio is set back in a large lot which has a mansion and plenty of trees and flowers in front. It is located at 40 West Mountain street. A. W. Coldeway, studio manager and scenario editor, tells me that the company is glad to buy certain kinds of feature scripts, but that no script reader is employed and the firm is really not in the "open market" for scenarios.

Allan Dwan was the popular toast master at the good fellowship dinner of the Photoplayers this week. He had as his guest Claude Golden, a clever card manipulator from the Orpheum who was on the bill last week. A goodly crowd of screen folk were present and the program was all that could be desired, Mr. Golden keeping the screen men in continuous laughter with his seemingly impossible card tricks.

If present indications can be used like an almanac, the Grand Photoplayers' Ball and Review will by far eclipse anything ever before held in the west in which picture people took part. The official ball will be held on the evening of Feb. 13, in Shrine auditorium, and is under the auspices of the Photoplayers' club. Already fake advertisers have made their appearance, but many exhibitors and players are "wise" and only do business with persons who have proper credentials. It is expected that every film favorite in this part of the country will be present.

A company of Selig players will depart shortly by boat for the Panama Canal to film certain scenes for "The Ne'er Do Well," by Richard Harding Davis. En voyage the company will do some water pictures.

Edward Abeles, acting the leading part in "After Five" for the Lasky Company, became stuck in the mud at San Pedro the other day and it took two husky men with a rope to extract the star player. They were at work near the beach on some mud flats, and Abeles stepped into a mud hole, much to his discomfiture. Oscar Apfel is progressing speedily with this picture.

Photoplay author, Mary H. O'Connor, writing from Santa Barbara (by the way this is the first time any one ever wrote from the American studio), says the company is lively and that Harry Pollard and Margarita Fischer are doing four-reel features. Miss O'Connor is writing the scenarios for them. S. S. Hutchinson is there overseeing everything, having just engaged Virginia Kirtley and Robyn Adair, both late of Usona at Glendale. They are working with Director Pollard. The company spent a few days out to sea at an island, where they filmed scenes for "The Quest."

A near fire came near destroying the Lubin studio this week when Paul Powell's company doing "The Secret Room," a two-reel meller drammer with lots of blood, thunder and fire, put on a fire scene in which a real piece of scenery caught fire and all hands were assembled to put it out, but not before the set was destroyed and the diffusers scorched. The scene was immense, the camaraman kept right on turning and the action was prolonged as long as possible to get the good effects.

May Robson, playing at the Mason opera house, announces that she will enter the film business, to appear in her successes, "A Night Out," "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," and others. She will join the Famous Players Company next summer in the east, after completing her tour.

The formal opening of Universal City has been postponed from Jan. 1 to March 1, the completion of the city being delayed that long. When the gates are officially opened, one of the largest and most complete moving picture plants in the world will be thrown open.

Even if winter is here and the rain falls once a week or so, Joe de Grasse has no fear for the sprinkles, for he has bought a snappy-looking Regal car and tours from home to studio (Universal), every day.

The L. A. Athletic Club is a popular place for photoplayers. Many live at the club, while others train there. Lately Carlyle Blackwell, Owen Moore and Douglas Gerrard have been pounding one another around with the gloves, and several good bouts have been seen between the stars of the film heavens.

Down at the Balboa the Brothers Horkheimer are doing things, their latest star to be engaged being George Larkin, of "Trey o' Hearts" fame. The company has secured one of the most popular men on the screen and as a "matinee idol" of the white curtain will appear in these films. Ruth Roland is being featured with Henry King in a serial. The stage space here is being tripled to make room for the new companies.

Tom Mix, the ever-Western hero of Selig's thrilling films, was slightly injured when struck in the back by a glancing bullet from the gun of a bad man Tom was fighting with in a stage coach story. The wound was but superficial and the director of westerns is still on the job at his studio in Glendale.

The following comes from San Francisco: "Fred LeRoy Granville, cameraman for the Sunset Motion Picture Company of this city, has just returned from a trip through the region of Kamchatka, and the borderland of Siberia, with a bunch of trophies that would make the Smithsonian Institution look like a second-hand store." Granville traveled 20,000 miles in a 110-foot power boat and exposed about 40,000 feet of celluloid.

Selig's has purchased about four miles of film from E. Swift Train, grandson of George Francis Train, who has also just come back from a trip to the Alaska-Siberian coast. He was gone eight months, and went as far north as Wrangle Island, where they assisted in the rescue of eleven survivors from the Karluck, an Arctic exploration vessel which was stuck in the ice for 24 days. Train secured some great pictures of native life, animals and scenery. He intends to go to the Philippines next year on a similar trip.

The forest rangers have given permission to moving picture directors to burn big piles of brush at certain times just after it has been cut in the Angeles National Forest, and it is expected that some companies will take up the offer and do some forest fire stuff. The rangers want the brush burned so that it will be out of the way. They will remain present to help burn it if the directors decide to use the fire scenes.

Edward J. Connelly, late of the legitimate stage, and who was well liked when he played "Everywoman," has been secured by Thomas H. Ince and is due to arrive here this week to start posing for the camera.

Burton King, who directed for Usona, has joined the Universal to direct Edna Maison and Ray Gallagher. John Brennan, late of Kalem comedies, has hooked up with the Sterling Company and will be seen in Universal program releases.

"It Is No Laughing Matter," is the title of a new film from Bosworth, Inc. Myrtle Stedman and Macklyn Arbuckle are the leading lights in the play.

Walter Edwards and his company with Elizabeth Burbridge have returned from a trip to the desert to get scenes for "A Midas of the Desert," a coming Ince release.

The Roller Skaters' Association of Southern California is after a Photoplayers' night. Clifford Howard, scenarioist, is planning the affair, and speeding on rollers is a kindergarten stunt compared with many things picture folk have to do, nevertheless it is thrilling and many will probably take part.

Edna Goodrich will be here in a few days to play in a big feature for the Lasky Company. At the studio everything is as busy as a mountain saw mill, the glass studio is nearing completion and everything under construction is being hurried to a finish before the big rains arrive.

Among the numerous studios to equip with electric lights is the Favorite Players, and Carlyle Blackwell is ready for all the fogs that care to come. He is busy on "The High Hand," with Alvarez Taylor directing the big company.

Crowded houses have greeted the running of the Belgian battle pictures at Trinity auditorium. The benefit to the sufferers ought to be great, for they certainly are interesting films.

Two thousand feet of film have arrived from Italy, where George Beban now is. The great 8-reel feature is fast nearing the completed stage and each day's cutting brings the release day nearer, when the people will have a chance to see one of the greatest feature pictures ever made.

CLARKE IRVINE.

BUSINESS GOOD IN ENGLAND.

Roy E. Aitken, managing director of the Western Import Company, which handles the output of several American Film manufacturers, the Reliance, Majestic and New York Motion Picture Corporation in England, returned to New York, Saturday, Dec. 12, on the "Lapland," having sailed from London on Dec. 2. Asked about the latest conditions in London, Mr. Aitken said:

"Strange to say the film business has not suffered. It is really bigger than it was before the war. The theatrical business is virtually dead, social life is at a standstill and the atmosphere of the clubs is even more subdued than that of the usual London club, but the motion picture shows go right on, showing what a hold the movies have in England. We are disposing of about 18,000 feet a week.

"When the war started our Berlin manager wired us that business would be all right as soon 'as the Germans got into Paris.' The Paris houses have just opened and Berlin is open, but we cannot get any film to them.

"So far as the film business is concerned, as there are no pictures imported from the Continent to England and none to America, this should work direct advantage to the American manufacturer and if the war continues should also create a new market for American film in South America, which has been supplied largely by European manufacturers. In England, however, this advantage to American manufacturers is being somewhat offset by the fact that fully one-third of the programs are war pictures. Such comedies, however, as the Keystones are in great demand as they supply the needed laughs to overcome the horrors of war."

ATKINSON REACHES THE COAST.

Wm. A. Atkinson, assistant general manager of Sawyer Film Corporation, reached San Francisco this week, after a tour through most of the cities of the middle west, visiting Sawyer zone offices. Mr. Atkinson reports that the picture game is booming everywhere, and that Sawyer is steadily gaining in popularity. While at the Coast, he will sign up several more producing companies for Sawyer.

DONALD MacKENZIE GIVES A DINNER.

Donald MacKenzie, who was directing the last episodes of "The Perils of Pauline," gave a dinner at the Hotel McAlpin on the night of Sunday, December 6th, to the Patheites both in the studio and office who have been cooperating with him in his work. Those present were: Fritz Whatne, who presided as toastmaster; Kyle, St. Germain, Mink, Jack Disch, Mohn, Van Arsdale, Steuernagel, Heinz, Zapetti, Miss Pearl White, Donald MacKenzie, Frank Lang, Alec Thompson, Harry Crandall, Lefty Miller, Frank Redmond, Mme. Staatz, Johnny Meighan, H. Stocker, Davidson, Miss Hannah Cohen and G. Bardet. Everybody had to make a speech, and some budding Demosthenes were disclosed. The dinner lasted six hours and all agreed that it was none too long.

Christmas Greeting

The Golden Pages in the History of Mankind are filled with messages telling of the Brotherhood of Man. As with the expiring year we renew our faith in the Heaven-born promise of Peace on Earth, to Men of Good Will, we may well look up to the Divine Power with feelings of profoundest gratitude. The best wish and the most fervent hope we can express as we speed this Christmas Greeting on its way to the friends and readers of The Moving Picture World is the wish and the hope for the speedy return of Peace of the World.

Each in his own sphere must feel a livelier sense of toleration, each must gladly accept more responsibility for the sum total of human happiness, each must be eager to spread the light and preach the blessings of peace. We can make no better pledge to ourselves at this Holy Season than highly resolve that we will use all our opportunities for making this world a better place to live in. Of such opportunities the men and women connected with the art of motion pictures will enjoy an undiminished share in this coming year of 1915.

To You A Hearty Christmas Greeting from the Staff of the Moving Picture World

May the New Year add a greater measure of Happiness and Prosperity than ever before to All our many Friends and Readers throughout the Wide World.

May every Branch of our great Moving Picture Art Deserve still Grander Success.

The Making of "Julius Caesar"

George Kleine Relates Interesting Anecdotes of the Stupendous Task—Directing 20,000 People Is Big Job, Says Film Magnate.

"REMEMBER, that a false move spoils an entire scene," says George Kleine, in an interesting discussion of the troubles that beset his producers in handling the twenty thousand people appearing in the great "mob" scenes of his spectacular feature, "Julius Caesar." "Remember, that aside from the cast of principals, nearly all of these twenty thousand people were untrained picture folk and that many of them had never been nearer a motion picture than the front seat in a 'cinematograph show.' So it was a big task for Director Guazzoni to impress each and every one with the gravity of the work and the necessity for absolute obedience. We needed every man, woman and child in those big scenes, and did not want to discharge anyone, yet it was certainly aggravating when some apeish fellow would grin into the eye of the camera and, in the lexicon of the craft, 'crab' the scene. And, remember, too, if the director did not catch him in the act and the scene slipped by to be found later when the film had been developed and printed, it then became necessary to reassemble all those people, pay them for another day's work and take the scene all over again or throw away the spoiled section.

George Kleine.

"Never have I seen a man handle a crowd better than Director Guazzoni. He is a slightly built man with a strong personality, a quick eye and a most remarkable way of getting people to do as he wishes. But no one man can get around in such a vast throng and deliver instructions personally. Guazzoni, therefore, appointed a number of colonels, captains and lieutenants, each responsible to the officer above him from whom he received his instructions, and each lieutenant responsible for himself and nine others. In this way he would convey his idea to that multitude through his colonels, who in turn would pass the instructions down the line to the officers below them, explaining the purpose and action of the scene. In Caesar's triumphal procession there must be enthusiasm, gesticulating, waving of palms, etc., while in the scenes depicting Caesar's funeral the action must be quite the reverse.

"Guazzoni certainly had his hands full," exclaimed Mr. Kleine, "when he made the scenes that followed the assassination. He was just three solid days getting the action he wanted. Keeping twenty thousand people on your payroll to get one scene puts an awful strain on your artistic appreciation, but we simply had to have that scene. It was necessary to the story. With Antony delivering his famous oration in the Market Place, the crowd had to be stirred from sluggish indifference to interest and then to pillage, murder and fire. It isn't hard for picture folk, but it did seem impossible for the crowd to understand what was wanted. The director was to fire his revolver as the signal for the crowd to begin shouting and running. They shouted and ran all right, but ran mostly into each other to the vast confusion of the whole scene. It was rehearsed again and again, but not until the third day did it begin to look spontaneous and natural. We wasted 2,700 feet of negative film getting a scene that shouldn't have taken over 100 feet in the first place. There was no telling what temperamental touch any one of them might decide to add at the last moment, despite repeated rehearsals.

"In the senate chamber after Caesar's death, several hundred senators are seized with panic and rush madly through a corridor about twenty feet wide. Of course all these senactors were dressed in their togas, and to suddenly spring up and run with those long, white garments trailing about their feet makes an accident insurance policy desirable. Invariably in the rehearsals some one would trip and a crowd of dignified Roman senators would pile up behind him. To lift the gowns up around their waist and run seemed the only logical thing to do, and I doubt not but that the senators did that very sensible thing when the assassination actually occurred, but, of course, we couldn't do that without utterly ruining the gravity of the scene."

The staging of any motion picture is no small task. In an ordinary picture usually twenty or thirty scenes must be built, appropriate furniture provided, costumes, etc. The tremendous labor involved in the mere preparation for such a subject as "Julius Caesar" can hardly be understood by the average layman. Twenty thousand people must be provided with twenty thousand costumes, each correct in detail, denoting the social station and nationality of the wearer. For instance, to distinguish him from the freeman, the Roman slave is marked by the cut and nature of his garments. The Roman civilian is not to be confused, by the passerby, with the patrician. Both the senator and the warrior has each his own position in the social strata, and his niche in life is designated by the clothes he wears. All these things must be considered in the manufacture of costumes. Eighteen seamstresses working steadily, by the aid of electric sewing machines, consumed five months in the manufacture of costumes for "Julius Caesar." The material was purchased in wholesale quantities direct from the mills at Birmingham, England, and the patterns laid out from water color sketches.

"Caesar" contains nearly two hundred scenes, each of which had to be especially constructed from colored sketches also. Each chair, desk, stylus, every bit of statuary and even the ornamental decoration of the doors and walls had to be historically accurate. These things were the work of not one but many minds. Several well known Parisian authorities on antiquities were hired to supervise the detail of the sketches and their word was law. Nearly all the interiors contain statuary. As a matter of fact, there are several hundred bust figures of solid marble used, and as a lapse of some thirty eight years is covered by the story, it was one of the many details to see that the marble figure of some famous Roman did not appear in a scene in which the action was presumed to take place at a date, prior to his birth.

It is difficult to say how much money is involved in the making of "Caesar." Its famous predecessor "Quo Vadis?" carried with it an expense account in excess of a quarter of a million dollars and "Julius Caesar" is easily three times as large in matter of ensemble and those things which make motion pictures costly. Much of this huge sum is represented by the pay roll item, but aside from the highly expensive "mob" scenes, there were many other unusual avenues of expenditure. A miniature city of Rome was built covering a space equivalent to six square city blocks. Eight cars of concrete were used in the construction of a Gallic fortress which Caesar's army storms and destroys. Two hundred carpenters and stone masons, eighty stage carpenters and their assistants and twelve motion picture directors were engaged in the big studio yards for more than eighteen months before a scene was taken. Then, too, there were thirty vessels to construct and make seaworthy. When everything had been made ready, every employment agency in Rome was called upon for unemployed men and women. Hence, there is but little wonder that even King Victor Emanuel, accompanied by the President of the Bank of Rome, found the time and inclination to visit the big motion picture plant during the staging of the picture.

PIERROT FILM COMPANY ENJOINED.

In an opinion on file in the United States District Court, Judge Mayer enjoins the Pierrot Film Company from manufacturing, selling or leasing photoplays manufactured with a camera used by the film company which is held to constitute an infringement of the patent rights of the Motion Picture Patents Company.

The action involves the validity of the Edison re-issue patents which were sustained by Judge Mayer in the litigation with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and allied Laemmle film concerns several months ago.

The Motion Picture Patents Company is seeking to recover damages as well as to protect its patent rights and a reference will be ordered to obtain an accounting unless the measof damages is compromised by the parties to the action.

POLITES SELLS HIS THEATERS.

J. D. Polites, proprietor of the Rex and Minerva theaters in Steubenville, O., has sold these two houses to W. J. Curn. The Minerva, which is one of the finest little picture theaters in eastern Ohio, has a seating capacity of 325, and has always done a capacity business. The Rex can comfortably accommodate 1,000 persons. Mr. Polites has purchased a big house in Chicago thereby adding another to the number of large picture theaters he owns.

Ralph Ince—Actor, Cartoonist, Etc.

By Thornton Fisher.

COME with me down to the Vitagraph shop today and meet my friend Ince—yes! Fine! All right—Clickety-cluck—clickety-cluck—(business of hitting the rails on a sixty-passenger B. R. T. "L" car).

"Youpsk Sklowf!" finally yells the guard and, being a good guesser, you have a hunch that he means Elm avenue and you are not wrong, for there, through the car window on your right you discern the large gray buildings of the Vitagraph Co. Alighting, it is only a few steps to the entrance of the picture works.

Once inside the studio courtyard you inquire for Ralph Ince and some one says: "There he is right over in that group. The tall young fellow wearing the soft hat."

You are convinced that you have been misinformed, but in response to his name a boyish-appearing young chap turns from the group and smilingly says: "Hello!" as he extends a friendly hand.

He impresses you as being a big unsophisticated youth who is enjoying every minute of life and when I say he typifies the vigorous, wholesome product of the country, I do not mean to convey to your imagination the vision of a raw, uncouth individual who exists only in "comics," but rather to point out that this man of the pictures has none of the ear-marks of the actor as we are prone to visualize him (and let me interpolate this is largely true of the majority of screen people).

Well, anyway, Ralph was born in that city justly celebrated for beans and a 1914 world's baseball championship. Nothing of moment seems to have disturbed his boyhood days and he "jes' growed" into a husky youth with conflicting ambitions, one of which drew him irresistibly toward the stage, the other was a desire to be a newspaper cartoonist.

To pursue his histrionic "bee" he joined a theatrical company and went to Scranton, Pa., where the show opened—and closed, leaving him with two bits in his pants-pocket, whereupon the embryo actor telegraphed to his father for transportation with which to join the "old folks at home."

However, as I mentioned above, Ralph had a talent for drawing and aspired to become a cartoonist as well as an actor and went under the tutorage of a noted artist of his day in New York and had the editors been more receptive Ince might today be doing cartoons on a newspaper, but his equipment in the art profession has proved a tremendous asset in his present vocation where knowledge of proper settings and skill in the construction of stage pictures is essential.

About seven years ago he entered the ranks of the Vitagraph Co., taking small parts for which he was paid by the day and at the same time joined the brave band of "sun worshippers," as they are called—i. e., those who depend upon the weather conditions for their livelihood. The chances for work were enhanced when the sun was shining. Hence the term, "sun worshippers."

Here is a young fellow who isn't a hero. Ralph Ince says so himself. If this young actor does not belong to the hero group it must be said that he has achieved the unique distinction of impersonating the great Emancipator as no actor has ever done.

He has become famous in this character, and thousands of "fans" throughout the world have caught the spirit of the great Lincoln through the splendid impersonation of this clever actor.

Mr. Ince explained that it requires two hours to complete his make-up in this part. Incidentally he increases his height three inches for, although measuring six feet one, he must bring himself up to the six feet four stature of Abraham Lincoln. It is hard to realize that this brown-haired, blue-eyed fellow can assume the physical characteristic of the beloved war President. Everybody likes Ralph Ince down at the Vitagraph studio. His smile is contagious and back of it is a soul brimful of good nature.

Well deserved good fortune has followed in the wake of young Ince since he became affiliated with the pictures. It wasn't long before he was on the regular payroll. Down at the studio they have made him a director, one of the youngest in the profession and when Ralph Ince directs he does all the word implies.

In the intervals when not acting or directing this versatile chap is writing scenarios or "knocking off" cartoons, the last mentioned being his favorite recreation. And at Bayside he lives the year round commuting every day reaching the studio about eight a. m., and remaining perhaps until five thirty.

If you should like to meet Ince go down to the studio some day and choose the last man you think is he and you will pick Ralph Ince.

ARTHUR S. HYMAN, OF ATLANTA VISITS NEW YORK.

Arthur S. Hyman, president of the Hybar Film Corporation, Forsyth Building, Atlanta, Ga., is spending a few days in New York City. Mr. Hyman has won the confidence of Southern exhibitors in his good judgment so much that he has increased the business of the World Film Corporation in the South by the astonishing extent of 100 per cent. in ten weeks. He finds business in good shape down there, naturally. He says that forty per cent. of the houses in his district are using big features at least part of the time and that such offerings as "The Man of the Hour" and "The Dollar Mark" have been the most popular. It seems that costume pictures and society dramas are not often enthusiastically received by Southern audiences just now.

The Vital Issue

By Robert Grau.

THERE is no phase of the motion picture situation as the New Year dawns on the horizon that is so intricate and also so delicate as that one now so widely discussed by press and public alike—namely, the problem of admission prices to the thousands of playhouses where the productivity of the film stories is the attraction.

Here we have perhaps the most vital phase of the distinctly business side of a great industry and it is fortunate that at such a time when discernment is so necessary, there are not a few experienced amusement caterers intrenched in picturedom, and these gentlemen know that the amazing prosperity of the photoplay house may only be perpetuated by holding fast the patronage of that seventy-five per cent. of mankind to whom the theater along older lines is a luxury wholly beyond its reach.

Some one has said that the day is near when such film productions as "Quo Vadis?" and "Cabiria" will predominate rather than be exceptional. [Presumably this is meant to indicate that the admission prices to all picture houses will be increased accordingly—Ed.] If that day is indeed near then it will also usher into filmdom the same disastrous conditions that now obtain in other branches of the amusement field. The trouble with the legitimate theater is not a decline in the productivity of the stage. Instead of creating new patrons for the speaking stage the vogue of photoplays has gradually enticed the middle classes to join the masses until even the erstwhile two-dollar-a-seat patron now divides his expenditure between the two modes of entertainment.

But with the improvement in the film output this division of expenditure is assuming such proportions in favor of the newer type of entertainment that what are called the first-grade play houses are at the time of this writing facing the worst financial crisis since public entertaining was inaugurated. Never were there so many "hits" recorded in the playhouse zone—plays unanimously praised by press and public are withdrawn—some sent on tour, others to the store house. The war is blamed for the conditions existent, but the truth is that the public has changed—while the managers of the so-called regular theaters have looked askance at each other, but utterly failing to meet the new conditions by completely altering their mode of business procedure.

And yet the writer believes that conditions in these first-grade playhouses are what they are because of the gradual discovery on the part of the amusement-loving public that in such theaters as the Strand and similar houses in all our larger cities it may enjoy a plethora of entertainment at a minimum cash outlay—while the play producer of Broadway and theatrical managers have stood still making no effort to entice the millions of photoplay patrons into their theaters; a new group of enlightened showmen have come upon the scene. Erecting in all the large cities luxurious neighborhood theaters of enormous seating capacity, attracting the multitudes at extremely low prices for seats.

But let no man be fooled into the belief that the basis for prosperity for these theaters is not the low prices of admission—not even a wholesale output of such productions as "Cabiria" and "Quo Vadis?" would justify an effort to increase prices in general. Such productions merely belong to the field wherein Mr. Hammerstein has sounded so pessimistic a note, and if there were a score of such expensive offerings in New York City simultaneously presented at "dollar" prices, the aftermath would be precisely the same, and the film manufacturer would echo Oscar and exclaim: "There are no more audiences."

Normally, one may expect each year two or three film productions eclipsing even the two above named, but these are apart from the industry proper. The future of the photoplay must depend on the survival of the vogue of the very lowest priced theaters where science and artifice have combined to create a nation of new amusement patrons. The photoplay house where ten cents is the average price represents in the writer's opinion the most vital and constructive asset of the film manufacturer and exhibitor alike. To increase the prices in these, save in special instances or for special occasions, would create an upheaval for such theaters appeal to more than half of mankind—not over ten per cent. of their patrons could pay a higher price and even this ten per cent. in paying an increase would not only attend less frequently, but would also be provided with incentive to transfer its patronage to other forms of low-priced amusements—and this is a very vital matter, for not a few low-priced theaters, presenting dramatic stock companies, vaudeville and the like, are competing with the photoplay house almost at every turn.

As for the five-cent theater the very fact that it is still existant and even potent after a period of nine years since its advent should silence those who insist that it must pass. As a matter of fact, the five-cent theater is as great a boon today as ever; moreover, one may not safely predict its passing. There are millions of men, women and children who never pay more than five cents, and there are as many more who "graduate" from the nickelodeom to the higher priced theaters. Both classes represent pillars of the tremendous industry.

This article is written from the standpoint of the "showman" for the purpose of indicating the necessity of preserving an equilibrium in the most lucrative amusement field of all time. The one menace at the moment is not the low-priced theater, nor even the lowest-priced one, but the danger of an unheaval due to lack of discernment on the part of the exhibitor.

There will never come a retrograde movement for motion pictures as an entertainment while the manufacturer and exhibitor operate along the lines of least resistance. The appalling conditions in the older field of entertainment have not been created by the war so much as by the public's changed attitude toward high prices. That photoplay houses are attracting a normal patronage despite war conditions is due to the splendid programs they offer and to the fact that the patrons have an abundance of price bargains to choose from. The five-cent theater has a mission all its own—the dime house will always be what it is today, to increase the prices in either class would merely place them in another class, while the theaters where a scale ranging from five to twenty-five cents prevails, represent the extreme possibilities of what constitutes as an entity "a new era of the theater."

Beyond these three classes would be a departure from the basic foundation of motion picture prosperity. There will be dollar film productions, even two-dollar ones, but there will never be any greater public for them than there is now for dollar and two-dollar productions of spoken plays. Let there be no mistake about that.

Just as sure as the manufacturer (I prefer to call them producers) and exhibitors seek to alter the equilibrium created by the three grades of theaters, they will inaugurate a movement which may ultimately end disastrously. I know no better way to create a condition such as has caused Oscar Hammerstein to cry out in despair: "There are no more audiences."

After all, the problem is one of larger auditoriums and perhaps a less bounteous feast for the public. Surely it is not one to be solved by higher prices generally.

NOTE.—In view of the present movement in favor of higher admission prices, we commend this article to the careful consideration of manufacturers, exchanges and exhibitors. Some of the points made are beyond question and in most cases we are inclined to believe that it is of greater importance to limit the size of the low-priced programs than to increase the price of admission all along the line. We expect to publish the opinions of others on this most vital and important matter in future issues.

Vitagraph to Photograph Subway

The Picture Will Form a Part of the Many Subjects Being Made for the Exposition.

AS a part of the fifteen thousand feet of pictures which the Vitagraph Company is making for exhibition at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, Tefft Johnson, one of the directors of the company, is now at work on a single reel showing the subways and railway facilities of New York City. All of these pictures, which are being made for and with the co-operation of the municipality, must be completed by the opening of the exposition on Feb. 20. They are nearly half completed. Each one is based on a scenario designed to develop human interest aside from the particular metropolitan activity being exploited. The subject on which Mr. Johnson is now at work will show among other places the Pennsylvania and Grand Central stations, with trains arriving and departing. The photographing of the subways and its crowds will be a novelty, even for New Yorkers.

The taking of pictures in places that heretofore have not been invaded by the motion picture camera has been greatly simplified through a recent invention, known as the Panchroma portable arc lamp. Packed in a special box, the size of an ordinary suit case, the lamp weighs eighteen pounds. Only fifteen amperes are consumed at 100-120 volts for two arcs. It may be connected with the socket of an incandescent lamp. Under these conditions the lamp is said to have an actinic candlepower value of 8,000. It may rest on its own base or be elevated on a tripod. William P. S. Earle, in charge of the lights at the Vitagraph plant, and a former photographer, is assisting Mr. Johnson.

A Picture House in an Apple Orchard

Consequently It Is To Be Expected That the Man Who Runs It Is a Unique Character.

By Geo. E. Carpenter.

ASK any exchange manager in the inter-mountain region the question, "Who is your most persistent and prolific correspondent?" The answer will be unanimous and vociferous, "R. M. Stanton, Odeon Theater, Wendell, Ida." Place your ear to the ground gentle reader and once more launch a query. "Who is the oldest man in point of years in the show business?" Once more doth the answer vibrate down the canyons and across the great American desert: "R. M. Stanton, etc., etc."

The Gem State herewith offers to back the aforesaid R. M. S. against all comers as champion wielder of the pen and the oldest resident in the show business. There is a legend to the effect that when Lewis and Clark blazed the trail to Oregon they encountered a white man in Idaho organizing a minstrel show among the Blackfoot Indians. That was many years ago, but Idaho's Exhibit A does not look a day older at this time of writing.

The only thing the writer has against R. "Methuselah" Stanton is that he objects to having his photo taken, so all one is able to do is to set his camera over among the weeds across the street and shoot the theater, apple trees and all. If one gets a magnifying glass he can just make out the veteran showman standing adjacent to the flagpole on the piazza.

R. M. Stanton is the daddy of Wendell, censors his own shows and gives his patrons the best on the market. If you were an exchange manager and sent the Odeon a subject with a murder, a crime or a questionable situation on the film, the Odeon would be dark on that night and you would get a letter as long as one of Jack London's novels by the next mail.

On wet days R. M. S. invites all the kids to come and play in his theater during the morning—and they are the original village cut-ups. He believes in educating the youth of Wendell, too. Despite the fact that this town is listed as having a population of 482 souls he has given them the Rainey pictures, Capt. Scott at the South Pole, Famous Players, Lasky features, most of Kleine's stuff; in fact, all the big ones that the Strand charges 50 cents, for he puts over the plate at 10 cents for adults, and if the kids can hide behind their mothers' skirts they get in for nothing.

Do not gather from this, oh, skeptical reader, that the kids of Wendell have a penchant for deadheading because the following testimony from reputable citizens is to the contrary:

In the summer time the veteran showman puts into operation the greatest ventilating system going—he simply throws open the two big doors in front and a couple of doors on either side of the audiorium and lets the breeze shake and ripple the screen and cool the fevered brows of his audiences.

Do the kids assemble on the sidewalk outside and take in the show free from the vantage of obscurity?

They do not. If they have no nickle they go to bed.

Furthermore they do not raid that apple orchard.

All of which would lead one to infer that the millennium had descended upon Wendell, Ida.

Does this unique showman make money? Deponent sayeth not. Ask still another question and once more the unanimous verdict goes cavorting down the canyons and across the great American desert. He gets the best and always pays his bills."

Another unique distinction in the much maligned motion picture business.

The writer has never borrowed money from the aforesaid R. M. S. who incidentally has no strings on him. He simply offers this tribute to one whom he considers entitled to rank among the most unique in the show business.

MinA Films Released

Much Discussed Comedy Makes Its Bow On General Film Program This Week.

THE long-heralded comedies known as MinA Films have now made their first appearance on the General Film Program. The first release, "The Thrilling Adventures of Count Veracc," was on the licensed schedule for Dec. 17. This picture was directed by Milton Fahrney and has for its leading woman Mlle. Valkyrien, the noted Danish film favorite, and is said to be the first American single reel subject to employ a great European star.

Few if any new ventures in the film industry have caused such a world of comment as MinA films since the original announcement of their manufacturer was made last summer.

The fact that they are now included in the General Film Company's Program is generally accepted as a testimonial of unusual quality, and as the identity of the producer—one of the oldest "magnates" in the industry—and the names of the directors and actors and particulars of manufacture were made known, the reasons for the choice became clearer.

It is now a well-known fact that short comedies have become, through public demand, an absolute necessity to exhibitors, and it was to fill this demand with a product which could be relied upon to sustain a set standard of quality week in and week out that MinA films were conceived.

The remarkable scheme of production and the roster of people employed, which are here published for the first time, readily explains the confidence of the powers in the ability of MinA films to fill this urgent want.

For the present the releases are to be made once a week on Thursdays, with additions being made from month to month until three a week are being released.

The list will include an advanced series of the animal pictures in which the Bostock animals will be featured. This collection is the largest and most famous aggregation of trained wild beasts in the world, and was purchased recently for MinA productions at a cost said to have exceeded $100,000. Twelve of the original trainers and Harry E. Tudor, who has managed the show for ten years, were engaged to handle the famous jungle performers.

Harry La Pearl, the leading American clown, who formerly headed the Barnum & Bailey and New York Hippodrome funmakers, is appearing in a serial which burlesques the melodramatic serials now so popular in picture theaters and magazine sections of the various newspapers.

Harry Palmer, author of the newspaper comic, "Babbling Bess" and a prominent war correspondent, is preparing a series of cartoon pictures. Mr. Palmer went to the scene of war to obtain sketches for his first subject, "The Siege of Liege," which has been announced for release Dec. 31.

Milton Fahrney is the chief director, and in his own productions Mlle. Valkyrien and Elaine Ivans, the "Little Nell of the Screen," appear.

Perhaps the most remarkable feature of the whole layout will be trick comedies made with a camera just invented by David Horsley and which will be used for the first time in MinA films. This camera makes two exposures on the negative with one turn of the crank, and it is claimed that first showing of the pictures made with this magic box will be a revelation to the old-timers of the industry.

MinA films are being exploited through a national publicity campaign such as has seldom before been applied to a single brand of film.

BOSWORTH SCORES AGAIN.

Elsie Janis and Owen Moore. The combination is irresistible! That is the latest message from the Bosworth studios and Mr. Moore has come from New York to play opposite Miss Janis in her new comedy drama, "Betty In Search of a Thrill." As the title suggests, Betty's hair-raising experiences will keep one on the ragged edge of mental precipices; she, pursued by the hero, does everything to give one shivery quivries from scaling the side of a house, jumping off a bridge into the water, disguising herself as a boy to—but watch for the picture! It will be released by Bosworth, Inc., on the Paramount Program to follow Elsie Janis's first picture, "The Caprices of Kitty."

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Just Think of That.

SOME of you who think it's tough to have to get out one program a week, give ear to Homer Croy and think how cutely nice it would be to have to get out a program in four languages, French, English, Greek and Arabic. Probably the job is split up and also probably it is not badly done in one of the languages, but the English section of the program of the American Cosmograph, Cairo, Egypt, is funny. One line reads:

My Wife Wants to Guide.
Ultra Comical Scene.

and Croy opines this must be the supreme heights of comedy. There is a "Splendin drama" and a "Grand adventures drama of 1,500 meters in 4 parts, played by the celebrated artiste, Capozzi, and his troops." The program is a four pager, 8 by 11. The front is in French, as is the middle section of the inside page; a full half, this being flanked by the English and Greek programs. The Arabic program occupies the back page. The program offers two comedies, a two-reel, a three and a four-part story, about ten thousand feet.

Mr. Croy writes:

American pictures are popular all over the Orient. So popular are they that in every city you come to the name of America figures in the name of the theater. In Bombay is the America-India Cinema theater; in Cairo is the American Cosmograph. People out this way take it for granted that as long as America has anything to do with a picture it will be a good one.

In visiting the American Cosmograph here in Cairo I was hit between the eye by three things.

As I was walking up the street to the moving picture theater about a dozen Egyptian boys tackled me holding slips in their hands that looked like cigar coupons. They thrust them into my face and yelled at the top of their capable voices that I buy the slips. How coupons should be concerned with theater tickets was more than I could understand; until I got in. Then I saw. If you go to a confectionery shop and buy a dime's worth of chocolate they give you a coupon. If you will takes this coupon under your arm and go over to the picture theater the box office will give you a reduction of five cents on any seat you buy. The boys who mobilized and bore down on me were trying to sell these coupons. From a boy you can buy three coupons for a nickel. As a result, hardly anyone goes into the theater paying full price.

The theaters here are built on the French style. What corresponds to our orchestra is a quarter and the galley ten cents. The average person who goes into the American Cosmograph in Cairo takes a quarter seat, but he planks down only twenty cents, for they all have the chocolate habit.

The second thing that hit me was the way how they get around using French or English films and fixing the titles so that the mixed audiences can follow the meaning. The audiences in Cairo are melting pots. The programs are printed in four languages. If the management wanted to change the sub-titles on an American film to Arabic (the native language of Egypt) only a part of the audience would understand. They had just as well leave the titles in English or French. This they do, and on the wall near the screen they throw by means of a magic lantern the Arabic translation. As soon as the running film flashes a sub-title the same words in Arabic appear on the wall, thrown by the magic lantern. As nearly all the English people out here can read French and all the French make out English, the only big trouble comes from the Arabic-reading people and this is skirted cleverly by use of the projection lantern.

The third thing that I will always remember about the Cairo theaters is the harem box. Until only recently it was impossible for an Egyptian woman to go to a moving picture theater. An Egyptian woman must never show her face in public. The great joy of gazing on that is reserved for her heavy-whiskered husband. You can't imagine how particular they are of their women's faces. Their women wear slashed skirts that make me gasp, but they have to keep the towel over their physiognomy. When they are having a tooth pulled they wear their veil during the operation. This they do by pulling the veil up far enough for the dentist to get his hands under, while the muscular husbands stands a few feet behind with a scowl on his face and a cane in his hand. So, of course, it was impossible for women to go to a picture theater where they had to sit among the hoi polloi and be rudely gazed at by mere men. The moving picture theater men gave this custom the half Nelson by building special boxes for women, which they call harem boxes. These have fine blinds drawn over them through which the occupants can see, but which shield them from the crude, staring men in the pit below. But the husband can not sit in the harem box with his wife. Oh, no, that would never do, as some other woman might buy a ticket for that box and, goodness gracious, there would be a married man in it. So the devoted husband, after depositing his wife in a harem box, has to go off and sit in another box by himself. No, the moving picture theater in Egypt is not popular with newly married men. When the show is over she goes out a side entrance and steps into a closed carriage without a masculine soul ever having seen her face during the evening.

The moving picture theater is just beginning to have a big run with the women of Egypt. All their lives they have been shut up and now for the first time they are having a chance to see what is going on outside the doors of their harems. Egyptian women call the name of the moving picture theater blessed.

And let me tell you some of the Egyptian women are stunners. I haven't stood around the side entrances for nothing.

Mr. Croy adds, in a personal letter:

> Martial law was declared this afternoon and all Egypt is excited. It looks pretty blue here; there is fear of an uprising. There will be very few more films from Europe brought over, if any.
> This war has held me back something awful. That great military commander and authority, W. T. Sherman, plumbed the depths of human philosophy when he observed pointedly and somewhat coarsely, War is hell. William T. hit the nail square on the cranium. I am led to believe that he had tried to work in a colony taking moving pictures while the Motherland was at war and after haunting a hall for a week for a military permit to take pictures came home and penned his deathless words.

He has been off the job since his Indian letter on account of illness, and now his trip has been cut short by the war. He is due back in town very shortly.

Does It Himself.

H. C. Irons runs his own theatrical page in the Martinsburg, W. Va., World. He does the whole page in return for a good proportion of his own stuff and the signature. Ever talk to your own local editor?

Too Much.

The Sun theaters, Springfield, Ohio, combine in a full page on Sunday for three houses. There is too much type matter for any of it to be read. The page looks imposing, but it discourages the eye, and if the paper cannot print fine screen cuts, these would better be left out. A few words that are read are far better than several thousand that are not read. This advertisement is so confused that one does not know just where to start in. The eye gets discouraged and goes on strike. Three separate advertisements, well displayed, would have been far better. A man does not have to read your advertisement. The trick is to coax him too, and you must not give him too much of a job.

Soak 'Em.

And in this connection here is something from Film Facts, the house organ of the American Feature Film Co., Boston, that fits right in. It is by Louis B. Mayer:

> When rubber sponges were first put on the market it was hard work for the manufacturers to get the stores to introduce the unknown article. After repeated visits to a buyer for a national syndicate of stores, a salesman reported to the manufacturer that he could not even get a word from his man. "He just sits there silent as a Sphinx," said the disappointed drummer, "and I can't get a word from him."
> The office boy was listening intently. "Fill your sponge with water and soak him in the eye," he said jokingly. "A great idea," cried the manufacturer. "Go back, Jones, and do just that. "With the most profound pleasure," said Jones, and he was off again to see Mr. Buyer.
> Once in the office again with the syndicate buyer he tried hard to get a word from him, but in vain. Taking the wet sponge in his hand, he threw it with force right into the face of the man. "What's that?" sputtered the surprised buyer. "That's the rubber sponge I've been trying for weeks to show you," shouted the salesman angrily. "Let me see it again," said the buyer, and as the surprised salesman picked up the sponge and presented it, the purchasing agent continued, "It's mighty soft for rubber, and really holds the water, doesn't it? How much are they?" And the salesman landed a big order.

Of course he adds that he has a "soaker" to show, but he gives the secret of getting attention. Make them sit up and take notice, but don't get as original as the sponge salesman.

Supererogation.

The Lehigh Orpheum, South Bethlehem, Pa., sends in a vest pocket program and wants some comment. All we can say that it is a nice looking program and that if we were getting it out we would not try to change it much, because it is all right as it is. Two catchlines help some. One is "Every day something extraordinary." The other runs "We show the Right pictures and show the Pictures right." More than that no sane patron can ask, and the program backs up the first line and the house backs up the other.

"My Stuff."

W. S. Bassett, of Rochester, Ind., writes that he sent in some stuff a month ago and has not seen it commented on. He fears the stuff was thrown out. It is not that. This department is worked ahead of the date of issue, and sometimes it takes a few weeks to get an item in. Mr. Bassett calls his house "My show," and now he is getting out "My weekly," a house program with a front page talk, something on the second page and then the full program. He works a new scheme in that he prints on two grades of stock, sending the better stuff to his regulars. The idea is good if the other fellow does not find it out, but he is apt to find it out and get sore before he argues it out that he is not a regular and the other chap is.

The copy is well written and shows personality, always a valuable feature. We think he could make it even more personal, even at the cost of cutting down the program proper to two pages. Just a shade more enthusiasm about his bill would give much added value. This does not mean to brag, but to be modestly certain that the offerings are good. There is just a shade too much apology in the tone of the readers, an effort to explain why the performance is good. Take this for example:

> Picture shows, like other lines of business, depend for their sucess upon the public demand. It is by this demand that we are guided. While we cannot exactly supply all of the demand of the public, we have noted our patrons' preference and have selected a number of productions accordingly. They will be shown as follows:

This suggests that he is hedging against error. Now compare it with this:

Did It Ever Occur to You.

> that the best theaters in New York and Chicago have no better program headliners than our list of TUESDAY SPECIALS?
> Our confidence in the quality of these pictures is based on our knowledge of the success of these manufacturers in always producing the most successful film plays.

This suggests that he has obtained the program not because he hopes it will please but because he knows that it will. Be certain, but not too cocksure.

Wants to be Praised.

We think that S. R. Clawson, of the Cozy theater, Okmulgee, Okla., knows that he turned out a good advertisement and wants to be patted on the head. Anyhow he sends it in for criticism. At the worst we would be kind to a man who had to live in a town with a name like Okmulgee, but we do not have to make an effort. The advertisement is good.

It is a four-column advertisement nine inches deep. There are four changes of bill, and so four boxes with an across ad. strip top and bottom, the name twice at the top and once at the bottom. About the only break is that the "Tonight," "Tomorrow," "Thursday," and "Friday" are not dated and are permitted to overshadow the titles of three out of the four headliners to a small degree, not seriously, but enough so to keep it from being just right. Two of the headline titles, too, are in smaller type than the fillers—and the public is sometimes guided by the size of the type. For the rest it is all open display and a man with poor eyesight can read the entire advertisement, for there is nothing less than twelve point and much runs eighteen and twenty-four. In a word it will be read because it can be read without effort, and a newspaper advertisement is paid for because it is supposed to be read. If it is not read the manager loses, and it is not read when a manager uses too much type or too small a face. A man with average sight can read the entire advertisement ten feet away. A lot more could have been printed in the same space—but it would not have been read.

'Way Ahead.

The People's Theater, Sunbury, Pa., advertises its Paramount program, two a week, from November 23 to February 22. This is going some. They hedge a little by explaining that the picture may be a day late or early, the change being duly advertised. They run a good paragraph to argue that if the admission is raised to ten cents, it's worth it. It might be well to give your own patrons the same suggestion—and live up to it—on advanced prices.

From the Third Street.

For months we have been passing some good things along that we picked from the Third street theater (Easton, Pa.) program. Lately we asked if that was all they did, and it appears that it is not. They send a lot of stuff and an interesting letter, part of which runs:

> I am sending you under separate cover a page of the Sunday paper, and the two daily papers. These ads are changed every day in the daily papers with three or four write-ups every week. The photoplay news in the Sunday paper is conducted by myself. Am also sending you novelty advertising cards that we get out from time to time, whenever we have a picture that allows us an opportunity to get something of this kind up.
> These are only a few things we do besides our program. We have been showing pictures in our theater every other Sunday evening for the past three or four months. We first started in having features sent to us with the intention of booking after seeing. We then invited three or four hundred people, picking them from our patrons, and mostly people who are not in the habit of visiting our theater regularly. It proved to be the talk of the town. It has come to the point now, when our patrons almost demand a show every Sunday. If this were a state-wide movement, we would in a short time have Sunday shows in Pennsylvania. I am sure the film exchanges would be only to glad to give the theaters a free program of films for three or four Sundays. After that it would be a matter of the exhibitor going to his Congressman or Representative of State, and then it could be seen whether people want Sunday shows or not.
> We have had requests from people all over the United States for a copy of our program. This is due to your mentioning it in your columns. We wish you could find time, in the very near future, to come over here and spend a day with us. We are only two hours from New York, and on three railroads.

We are going to run down there some day and look over the houses—they have a number. Meantime, read over that Sunday scheme. Where the general trend of opinion is against Sunday performance, it is unwise to fight the Sunday opening, but where the people want the decent entertainment and only a few knock-kneed rural legislators stand between the cities and rational entertainment instead of "side door" stuff, this should be a good opening wedge.

Good Frames.

The Kraus Company has recently put on the market some aluminum frames for their 11-14 stock pictures that are worth more than the fifty cents they charge. Aluminum requires less care than brass and is better than wood. With a set of the photographs and a few frames, the lobby display can be kept right up to date.

Clips Wanted.

The last couple of weeks, there has been a dearth of good clip stuff. Surely some of you chaps are getting out good original lines. Send in what you have. You use the good ideas of others, and once you have used a good new idea for yourself, it is of no further use to you. Send it along that others may use it and profit thereby.

To Match the House.

Having enlarged the Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., by moving back the rear wall, the program now runs up to twelve pages.

Montgomery's First.

Frank Montgomery sends in his first program for his Jacksonville houses, the Grand and Prince. He put his personality into the opening issue, and his greeting is characteristic. It may be useful to some of you others. Here it is:

Just a Word or Two.

> I have never before issued a program in this city, and since it has always been my practice to explain fully to my patrons, I want to briefly state my reasons for instituting this new departure—There is so much to be told in advance about a picture program that one can't be expected to keep a file of newspapers for reference—There are so many pictures that need the help of a synopsis, one can't be expected to know the best of them unless they are told. ¶ Therefore I have adopted this method of giving you first hand information about the feature pictures you will see in the GRAND and PRINCE Theaters—Each Saturday you will be able to get one of these programs from the GRAND or PRINCE Theater—It will be your guide book for the following week. ¶ Such information relative to the pictures as can be given in an abbreviated way, you will find on other pages—As far as is practical the pictures of the week will be described in short synoptic paragraphs—Other pages will be devoted to remarks on pictures, players and other items of general interest to photo-play patrons. ¶ This initial program is but the beginning of what I hope to be a permanent venture, and succeeding numbers will be far more attractive and complete. If you care to offer suggestions, criticisms, or requests, they will be welcomed and carefully considered.
> Yours for Pleasure,
> MONTGOMERY, The Moving Picture Man.

Did you note that "synoptic paragraph?" Cute little thing, isn't it? But its' all there, and it means just what it says. The paragraphs are brief, none running above fifty words. The typographical layout is good, but one thing we do not like is that the advertising and not the program is on the right-hand pages. If Mr. Montgomery thinks more of the other fellow's advertising than he does of his own, it's all right, but we would prefer the right-hand page for our own use if we were running a program for the benefit of the house. It is a sixteen-pager right from the jump. Each house gets half a page a day. We think it would pay to drop some of the advertising and run news and comment instead. Give them a reason for wanting to take it home.

Wants Suggestions.

Charles H. Mahone, of The Picture Show, Cordell, Okla., sends in some of his paper and wants an opinion. The thing we like best is on a throwaway announcing a distribution of those two-wheeled coasters. The advertisement says:

This Is Not a Chance Prize Scheme.

> Where only one or two can win and all the others lose. Every child can get a Tango Racer and every mother a free pass.

That's the way to do it. Where all can win there is no soreness and no reaction against the house. The prize schemes look attractive, but they seldom do a house real good. In this scheme coupons are given with tickets. One hundred coupons are good for a racer. If the mother accompanies the child to the theater when the coupons are turned in, she is given a free pass for a week.

Another good piece of paper is a circular explaining why the prices of admission have been raised through necessity. It bears almost too hard on the fact that the house does not profit greatly by the advance. The reiteration of this statement is apt to rouse suspicion, and it is so clearly stated the first time that it is not necessary to repeat. On the whole, though, it is good, straight talk, lucid and illuminating.

In the four-page program we would suggest giving the date as well as the day. Three of the pages are split, half a page to a day. The day of the week is announced, but not the date. The front page (and it is a well-displayed front page) gives the date, but dating each day will not only make it more explicit, but it will emphasize the fact that this is a running program. If there is any reason for not dating the days, a rule at least three points thick should be placed under the day to throw it into prominence. As a general thing, Mr. Mahone seems to be in the right road and in no great need of comment. He has the gift of being able to say what he means.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will full manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return, stamped envelope is inclosed.

Looking Ahead.

BANNISTER MERWIN is beyond question one of the most careful and painstaking writers of photoplays in the business. More than this, he is a man who is not contented with his personal success. He gives the best that is in him to advancing the status of the entire craft. For this reason we quote liberally from a recent letter, though, perhaps, in doing so we traverse his wishes, since he was not writing for publication. But he touches on the sore spots of the business with a certainty that makes his letter doubly interesting at this particular moment when the producers of film are facing a crisis. He writes from London:

> The greatest difficulty I am up against here is finding writers. You see, we are doing nothing but exclusives, and for many months have been looking for original exclusives rather than adaptations—though, of course, we have our share of book and play rights to adapt. I work like a trooper to develop writers who can supply us with original exclusive stuff. It has not been easy. We have developed several men who can turn out one reelers; but when one comes to the stuff that is worth a feature production, I find that two things are required: a picture sense of a story and the ingenuity to develop that story in detail; and, secondly, the inspiration to conceive big ideas.
> The exclusive is being run into the ground by the padded drivel with which the market has been and is being flooded. It is not so much that we need more exclusives as that we need better ones. In an open market such as we have here this problem will ultimately take care of itself, but in countries where the theaters have to take stuff whether it is good or whether it is bad, it seems to me not at all improbable that the goose that laid the golden eggs will soon be killed.
> It is my opinion that a real exclusive must have something behind the story. It must be built on the background of a worth while idea, whether that idea be social or psychological. If a story has no background, but is merely something that happens, it is fit only for an ordinary release. Otherwise why "exclusive," unless, indeed, the object of the exclusive business is to alter the system under which films are sold—and if that is so, deterioration of quality is bound to pull exclusive prices down to the price level of ordinary releases.
> Watching films in London theaters, I am more and more impressed with the absolute necessity of proper photo-play writing. Skeleton scenarios are doing a lot of harm. They are, I think, responsible for the "type stuff" we are getting. What we need on the screen today, most of all, is not types but individuals—human beings. It seems so easy to create interesting screen characters—and yet so hard. However, we must remember it is not altogether the fault of the writer. The producer must come in for his share of the blame and so must the actor. But tell me seriously, are there any photo-play writers in America yet who are really writing photo-plays? Are there not any men or women who use six or seven thousand words in the elaboration of one reel of action. If you tell me there are not, I shall feel depressed.
> We stand ready to buy original exclusive photoplays at good prices; even to writers who are not very well known we have offered royalties. And yet it seems almost impossible to get the stuff. Of course, one of our difficulties is that we are looking for English treatment of English subjects. Also, I regret to state, that we have some difficulty because we insist on quality and tone. There are some writers I have talked to who seem to think secretly that I want to do all the writing myself. This is far, far from the truth. The more of us the better; and anybody over here who is in earnest can have the best I can give him in the way of advice and discussion. I have even, in one or two cases, had writers come to the studio and practically live with the producer from the start to the finish of a picture to see if they could get the hang of it that way; but the results have not been very satisfactory.

Since the commencement of the war, some of the manufacturers have awakened to a realization of what their American market is. Up to now many of them have been content to break even on sales at home and take their profit from the European market. Here is a letter from an American who goes to the theater, who observes and studies:

> The world has never been in such turmoil and undergone such travail and all, whether consciously or not, are in a state of tension. Audiences everywhere are keener now than I have ever seen them, and response to what is really good on the screen is prompt and hearty. The veneer of sluggishness seems to have been taken from everybody's mental make up, the horrors of war have bared human sympathies and the morale of the community seems to have risen to the point where the action of the screen, to make an appeal, must be based on elemental good. This is the time, then, for the Motion Picture Industry (or Art—if you insist) to establish itself in a field peculiarly its own—that of direct psychological communication with the audience; a communication free from the irritations of personality that we all have endured where the voice of an actor or actress was unpleasing. Some one has said that, if it were not for men and circumstance this world would be a pleasant place to live in. I cannot imagine this condition more nearly realized than in the viewing of a photoplay. To so establish itself (that is, the Motion Picture Industry), your dictum must be fully realized in the writing of the play and I hope that you may, at some time, give us an elaboration that will more forcibly call it to the attention of aspiring playwrights. The direct psychological communication that I have reference to is sadly lacking in most of the stuff produced. This is noticeably the case in "westerns," and deplorably so in most of the slap-stick comedies. most of us have gotten over any attempt to enjoy the slap-stick stuff—only recently I sat through one that did not elicit a single laugh—and most of the westerns are proving themselves nearly as boresome. I believe that the day is not far distant when the long-drawn-out "mystery play," with its fifty-seven varieties of catastrophies, will also yield to the pressure of wonderment that competent police interference is not invoked to put a stop to the deviltry and that in the place of all these—the slap-stick comedy, the western and the mystery serial we shall have human interest plays built on an understanding of the principle that you have enunciated.

More than six thousand miles separate these two writers; one in London, the other on the shores of the Pacific, and yet the plea is precisely the same. They want good plays. One man represents a studio with ideals. He wants good plays and cannot get them. The other man represents the supporting class; the audience. He, too, asks for good plays and does not get them. Meantime the few thinking manufacturers are wondering why the business has fallen off—and find the only answer in features.

That is not the answer at all. The real solution is not features, but merely good plays. Some types of feature productions are more successful than the one reel subjects, but only because they are more carefully and intelligently made.

The features, too, are largely drawn from books and plays. They had a basis story to begin with. Few one reels have much that is either novel or good to commend them, and much of what is good and novel is left out of the finished product.

And, mind you, it is not merely a question of paying more money for stories. That is not the solution. The answer lies deeper than that. It covers vastly more ground.

The greatest handicap to the business has been the releasing combination. It has almost entirely removed competition. It has eliminated the need for really good work so far as this market is concerned. To-day's good story will bring no more money than next week's poor release. The exchange buys by release days and not by subjects. It must take whatever is put out. Why worry, beyond a certain point, as to what is put out?

The next greatest handicap is the rule that requires releases to be in multiples of one thousand feet. The story that might be good in fifteen hundred feet is tortured into the shorter length as the foot of the Chinese woman is tortured into her bag-like boot. Scene after scene is cut out—two or three scenes—or a whole episode is cut out to be replaced by a leader written by the cutting man, who generally knows no more of literary expression than a Hottentot knows of Polar bear hunting. The story is reduced to one thousand feet, but it is ruined in the process.

That self-same cutting man is another enemy to the artistic picture. He spoils hundreds of pictures. More than once he has eliminated the one essential scene and ruined the play. You may think this is not possible, but some of you may have seen your own product cut beyond recognition, and you, at least, know this to be true.

The director, too, is in the main an arch enemy to the pictures. Mr. Merwin asks if there are no persons who now use several thousand words in writing a single reel. There are. There are probably half a dozen who have proved their skill to the point where one or more studios will accept their scripts in ample form. There certainly are not a dozen. The others, if they seek to make their scripts fully explanatory, if they seek to give the little touches that make their characters people with personality instead of mere puppets, are told that their scripts run too full. Two letters in the past week have taken up that single point. The director will not bother to study the author's ideas. He wants to make all scripts his own way—and he does, with the result that all of his scripts look much alike when they come from his hands. He takes only the bare idea and shapes that to his own mode of thought. This might be all right if he were an artist in production, but most directors are old-time stock stage directors or old-time actors who have picked up a knowledge of camera work. They are not artists, they are not even competent, and yet they are a law unto themselves and even their employers fear to transgress these laws. The poor script is built up to the producer's level. The script of merit is pulled down to that same level. All are alike when they come from his hands.

Worse than that, men who could not, for their lives, write a half-way good story or play or even originate a decent plot, are hired to write and produce their own plays in the mistaken belief that in this way they will be better suited, while at the same time expenses are kept down.

As a result of all this plays have sunk to a common level. If the really competent writer is hired to produce a script, he is not encouraged to learn technique. He is hired for the use of his name, which possesses advertising value. Some studio employee is entrusted with the work of making the actual script. It, by chance, good work is turned out, the director announces that he cannot bother with all that rot, makes his own two page working script and the same old sort of story.

A few real writers have come into the game. Men like Bannister Merwin, our own Louis Reeves Harrison, Emmett Campbell Hall and one or two who write under pen names, women like Maibelle Heikes Justice have recognized the future of the business and they are working now with heart and soul for the time that is to come, but writers who trust to style alone will not bother with technique of the camera and those who have risen from the ranks are not permitted to really show what they can do, save in isolated cases.

It costs no more money to make good pictures than it does to turn out poor ones. The cost of film is the same, the cost of actors is the same. All that is needed is intelligent and ever alert production and proper supervision, and the time is fast approaching when manufacturers must either produce good films from properly written stories or go to the wall.

It is not enough to turn out a thousand or more feet of exposed and developed film. There must be a story, the players must have identities, there must be the human touch and the appeal to the nobler emotions. Men must and will be hired to produce what an author has written; to study the author's ideas and transfer these to the screen instead of seeking to impose their own ideas upon the author's painstakingly prepared plot. And unless all signs fail that happy day is closer to hand than most persons appreciate. For the last five years the producer has been regnant. Now the author must have his day, and when that day comes, perhaps it will be found that men and women who can write for the camera will discover that it is worth their while.

To Canadian Contributors.

Do not send Canadian postage with your scripts. It may be an evidence of good faith, but they are not good for return postage. Get United States stamps. Some banks carry them, so do some tourists agencies. You may have some friend in the States, or we'll send you 48 stamps for a one dollar money order.

If You Live in Wichita.

If you live in Wichita, Kansas, and want to join an Inquest Circle, send a stamp and self addressed envelope and you will be given opportunity to talk shop for mutual good.

Wright Stops Thomas.

The following is from a letter William Lord Wright has sent to his professional associates with a request that it be given publicity. It is signed by A. Jay Miller, an attorney:

> In view of the annoyance and embarrassment occasioned Mr. William Lord Wright in the past few weeks by the statements in the circular letters of a Chicago enterprise to the effect that Mr. Wright had written a booklet for free distribution to would-be photoplay authors, and that he was in various other ways connected with this concern, permit me to say that Mr. Wright has taken up the matter and has effected a substantial cash settlement by way of damages for the injuries caused him, and has obtained a signed statement admitting the representations to be erroneous.

In other words, Mr. Wright, who is a contributor to the Dramatic Mirror and a consistent opponent to all fake school schemes, has stopped A. W. Thomas, of the Photoplaywrights Association, from using his name and reputation to gain pupils for the school Mr. Thomas is conducting as a part of that enterprise.

One of the objectionable lines is to the effect that "Mr. Wm. Lord Wright, Moving Picture Editor of the 'Dramatic Mirror,' has helped me. Together we have written a book, 'Wanted: More Photoplays.'" Another letter states that "Our list of Associate Editors, in addition to Mr. William Lord Wright, &c." Capt. Peacocke, Monte Katterjohn, Jack Byrne and others being named here and elsewhere.

In the booklet, to which reference was recently made in this department, a page and a third has been devoted to Mr. Wright, who is designated as a "Consulting Editor," and the added statement is blithely made that "While Mr. Thomas will personally handle those whom he instructs, he has at all times the invaluable co-operation of Mr. Wright, who has been a close friend of Mr. Thomas through these stirring pioneer days." Evidently the best of friends must part—and have.

N. Y. M. P. Not Buying.

In spite of the fact that we recently announced that the New York Motion Picture Company was not in the market for scripts, writers are still sending in. Scripts made in Inceville are all done from the work of a staff of writers familiar with the needs of that group of brands. Outside stuff is not wanted, so send none in.

Kalem Wants.

Phil Lang sends this very clear and helpful suggestion as to the Kalem Company's wants in comedy scripts:

> I know how you feel about publishing a company's statement of scenario requirements, because conditions change so frequently. For my part I have always hesitated to authorize a statement for the same reason. However, I believe we will be safe in passing the word to the comedy writers that we particularly desire single reel farces for Marshal Neilan's production.
> Mr. Neilan uses a good deal of "slapstick" but does not depend on it for his laughs. He has a splendid company of comedy players and can cast anything within reason. Writers who have had scenarios produced by him have doubtless been agreeably surprised to find their original stories resting in the middle of stories twice as big and twice as good. Because of his ability to tell a big farce story in 1,000 feet, Mr. Neilan has rewritten practically everything he has produced and the average scenario has been of little value to him, beyond the idea offered. I do not think any author has been offended by the elaboration.
> Unless the author is skilled in the preparation of these rapid-fire, short flash comedies, containing many close-ups, it will be well for him to submit only a complete synopsis. If the plot is available, the synopsis is quite acceptable. However, the carefully developed comedy corresponds in value to the dramatic subject which is perfected in technique.
> We do not care to consider scenarios of the "mouse-loose-in-the-girls'-dormitory" type and scenarios that border on vulgarity are not considered. I suggest that the comedy writers see some of Mr. Nelson's productions before submitting to us, as we handles a variety of subjects that it is impossible to offer any specific "tip."

Crystal Out.

The Crystal Film Company announces that it is no longer in the market for manuscripts. All of its stories are now prepared by staff writers and outside contributions will not be read.

At the Ed-Au.

At the December Ed-Au meeting Marc Edmund Jones read half a paper on "Pointing up the dramatic situation" and talked the rest because he did not have time to write it down. It served to start a discussion on various unrelated topics, George Sargent only talking about a third of the time instead of his customary half. Phil Lang reverted to the discussion of the previous meeting on Psychology and told of a coming Kalem release in which preparation for the event enabled the director to get over a thought transference stunt intelligently. The situation was one in which a wife is really the brains for her composer husband, though he does not realize this at the time and seeks inspiration and another city—with a new source of inspiration. In the supreme moment she projects an idea to him. Mr. Lang explained that it was only through an early scene showing that she gave him his themes that what followed was made clear without undue explanation through leaders. This gave rise to a discussion as to whether or not it was possible in a detective story to mystify the audience as well as the detective. It was agreed that it might be possible where there was not too much explanation. President Schulberg fought almost single handed for the superiority of the stage play over the original idea, but Mr. Jones called attention to the fact that only stage successes were used, and that there was about the same proportion of failures in stage productions as in original photoplay stories. It was an interesting meeting throughout and it is hoped that the club has at last completed its year-long discussion of the by-laws.

Checks.

Someone asks how long an author is supposed to wait for a check after returning a release slip. The question probably interests others. Most companies send a check within a week. Some habitually wait two or three weeks. We have had to wait longer than that. Very few send out a check with the release, although the release is virtually a receipt and acknowledges the receipt of the sum named therein. In most instances the delay is due to the fact that the persons empowered to sign checks are too busy to give time to check signing save at irregular intervals.

It has always seemed strange to us that the voucher check is not more generally employed, the simple process of putting the check through the bank automatically receipting check. Most magazines employ this form. Some merely use a rubber stamp on the back of the regular check. Others use a simple voucher. One company uses a voucher form or more than 800 words, about the longest we know of, and much more comprehensive than the release slip now used by most companies.

This saves bookkeeping, the making out of both slip and check, time, temper and credit, and yet some of the Mutual companies are the only ones we know using this form.

A Dollar Per.

An anonymous correspondent tells of an offer of three dollars for a three-reel script. If he will send along the company's letter and his script, we will be more interested than we can get in an unsigned letter.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

The first seventy-four questions are now ready, and printed in neat booklet form. They may be obtained by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy. You may be surprised at the number of questions you cannot answer without a lot of study. Canadians should send P. O. M. O., or coin only.

Question No. 64.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

How would you arrange your wall shutters so they would drop automatically within two seconds of the starting of a fire at either machine or the film box? How would you arrange to carry away the smoke? Explain in detail.

Roll of Honor.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 58. Nothing doing! Not a single answer near enough right on all points to entitle its sender to the Roll of Honor, and, taken as a whole, the replies to question 58 are rather a weird lot, displaying an amazing diversity of ideas with relation to this particular subject. Touro Glucksmann, New Orleans, La., came nearest to being right, in that he quoted his answer practically verbatim from the code. Where he fell down, however, was in answering yes on the part of the question reading: "Is the inside of conduit insulated?" I will build up a composite answer, the first part being by Touro Glucksmann, who prefaced his reply by saying: "No doubt my answer will be different from that of many others, and it will put many operators in mind of the fact that such a thing exists as the electrical code, copies of which may be obtained from local city electricians, or from the Board of Fire Underwriters without cost."

Reply to Question No. 58.

First part by Touro Glucksmann, New Orleans, La.

The Question, First Part:

Why is it that where insulated wires are strung on insulators in the open they must be kept a certain minimum distance apart, whereas they may be, and are, placed side by side in a conduit?

The Answer, from the "Code":

"Knob and tube in so-called open or exposed wiring rely upon air gap for insulation, for durability and protection against grounding or cross connection, except at supports usually of porcelain. In mixed circuits of conduit and open work all circuits must be grounded.

Distance apart and how far from surface wired over wires must be kept:

	Voltage.	Distance from Surface.	Distance between wires.	Distance between supports.
Open work	0-300	½"	2½"	4½'
Open work	301-550	1 "	4 "	4½'
Open work	0-300	1 "	2½"	4½'
Open work, damp places	301-550	1 "	4 "	4½"
Concealed work	0-300	1 "	5 "	4½"

The second part of Question 58 reads as follows:

Is the inside of a conduit insulated?

Nobody has answered that portion of the question right. Conduit may be insulated or uninsulated in its interior surfaces. In fact a great proportion of pipe conduit is not insulated at all. Tubing used for conduit is coated inside and outside with enamel, which is pliable and will not soften under moderate heat, but this enamel is merely intended for the protection of the metal and to facilitate the insertion or removal of wires. The coating is not intended to be relied upon for insulation between the wires and the metal. A complete conduit system must have good electrical connection between all joints of all parts of the system, and then the wire system must be grounded, so in case of leakage between wires and walls of the conduit the leakage will be led directly to the ground.

So unsatisfactory were the answers, taken as a whole, that I requested Mr. H. S. Weinkoop, Electrical Engineer in charge of Division of Electrical Inspection, City of New York, to give us the correct dope on Question 58. Mr. Weinkoop is, I think, as well posted and thoroughly competent an electrical engineer as could be found anywhere in these United States, therefore his reply carries with it authority. Mr. Weinkoop says, in effect:

I have your letter of November 23 in losing copy of question booklet with Question 58 marked. With reference to this question, where wires are strung on insulators in the open they are kept well separated in order to decrease the chances of a short circuit, which might be caused by mechanical injury, derangement or a sagging or swinging of the wires, and, if a short circuit occurs in an exposed location, surrounding material may be set on fire. Where wires are placed in iron conduit, however, the chances for short circuit is very materially decreased, and if a short circuit does develop it is confined within the pipe, and ordinarily causes no damage except to the circuit itself.

The code sanctions the placing of four 2-wire, or three 3-wire circuits in a conduit, provided these circuits are all of the same system. The purpose of this limitation is to avoid the excessive mechanical injury which might result from an endeavor to draw a large bundle of loose wires into one conduit.

For direct current circuits it is not essential that all wires of a circuit be enclosed in one conduit. The code, however, recommends this practice, and demands it for alternating current systems, in order to avoid induction effects.

Conduit with insulation on the inside—generally known as lined conduit—has become obsolete, it having been found to be far preferable to place the insulation on the wire itself, rather than on the pipe.

Edison Projector Production Postponed.

The fire, which wiped out the greater portion of the Edison plant, at East Orange, destroyed all patterns, jigs and tools, used in the manufacture of the new Edison projector, described in last week's issue of the Moving Picture World.

Several months will therefore elapse before the machine can be placed on the market.

Why?

Montana writes:

While visiting in Chicago during the past two weeks I contributed my nickel or dime to a number of picture shows. Now I have noticed many times where you, or your correspondents, have criticised the projection in certain theaters. The question I want to ask is: Why do the theaters in small towns have, as a general rule, a better projected picture than those in large cities? One of my main reasons for visiting Chicago was to learn something—to watch high-class work, and thus be able to criticise my own work intelligently, and thus be enabled to put on a better picture myself. Nearly all the Chicago theaters are beautifully decorated, but when it comes to projection, I am sorry to say I got practically no ideas, nor could I learn anything from what I saw. At one place in particular, The Panorama Theater, on Prairie avenue, near 51st street I saw "The Man of the Hour," and it was a shame, verging on an outrage, the way the picture was run. In the first place it was altogether too fast; something like twelve minutes to a reel. The shutter of one of the machines was way off, and the operator kept a very poor light. Nor was this all, for there seemed to be a great deal of side and up and down motion, which I do not believe was due to fault in the film. I am not writing this letter because I want to kick, but I do hope you will say something about this matter, and put it in heavy, black type. I am in a small town, in a far western state, but, if I cannot put on a better projected picture than I saw in any theater in Chicago, I would not call myself an operator. And yet, I venture to say that if I were to seek work in any of those Chicago theaters they would turn me down on the ground that I was a small town operator, and, therefore, what could I possibly know about projection. Bear in mind, Brother Richardson, I do not claim to be a first-class operator. I am not. But I am anxious to learn all I can, and, while I don't claim to be first class, I would rate the operators in Chicago whose work I viewed to be about fifth class.

Montana requests that his name and location be suppressed. I am sorry this is so, however, I am going to violate his request to the extent of saying that the letter comes from Lewiston, Montana. I would not publish this letter but for the reason that the facts set forth are unquestionably true. This does not, by any means, mean there is no high-class projection in Chicago, but, as a matter of fact, while there is probably some really high-class work in the Windy City, there is an enormous lot of very poor work, and some of it is very poor indeed. This, I think, is to a considerable extent due to the fact that the operators' organization of Chicago, is according to the words of its own officials, absolutely opposed to the education of the operator. This was the statement made to the editor of this department by two of the officials of that union, one of them its business agent. It is unnecessary to say that where an operators' organization takes that stand, progress is going to be decidedly slow. The men, as a whole, are likely to depend on the strength of the organization to raise their salaries, and are unlikely to make any large effort to give improved service in return for the higher wage. Of course, this sort of thing cannot, and will not, last forever, even in Chicago, but from all reports it is the condition there now, and these reports have come from many directions. It is to the shame of Chicago operators that a small town operator, away out in Montana, could say and say with truth, that, while he, himself, makes no claim to being a first-class operator, still he would be ashamed to place on his screen the kind of projection he saw in the second city of the United States. The editor of this department will back him up personally to the extent that he, the editor, visited some theaters in Chicago less than two years ago and therein viewed the display of the union slide on the screen followed by projection which was anything else but high class, and, too, a short while ago a traveling operator visited our office here in New York and related an incident about seeing a union slide projected on a screen in a Chicago theater, one half of which could not be seen, due to discoloration of the light.

It is not a pleasure to the editor to talk this way about Chicago, because he lived there for five years. He would much prefer to say good things, but the truth is the truth, and, much as he regrets to say it, there is no denying the fact that the Chicago operators' union is absolutely unprogressive and reactionary; that it is strenuously engaged in trying to raise itself by its own boot straps in the matter of demanding higher wages without in any way, shape, manner or form endeavoring to raise the standard of work among its own members. I suppose the Chicago union won't like this article a little bit, but it is no one's fault but its own that it is written. Sooner or later the mis-leaders of the Chicago Union (and it has up to date been "blessed" with an almost unbroken line of mis-leaders) will be discarded and progressive men of sense put in their place. The sooner this happens the better for the Chicago operator.

Bad Conditions.

A theater manager in a good sized town in Pennsylvania contributes the following interesting data concerning conditions:

> I am almost ashamed to acknowledge, or set forth the conditions existing in this locality. I have been with this one house for two years and during that time have been allowed to expend $35.62 on repairs for both machines. My operator gets a salary of $11.00 per and has been here for six years. He gets what I consider as the best light in this state, and is a sober, reliable man. The theater is upstairs three flights, and S. R. O. is the regular word, for which I believe I deserve some credit. Not withstanding these things, I am receiving the enormous salary of $12.00 per week. Do you think that the operator and I are receiving our just dues? Our manager recently built a new theater costing almost $50,000; also he owns several large properties, all made in the last few years. When I read of some salaries that are being paid I get almost discouraged with the business. I have been in it now eleven years, part of the time as illustrated song singer and several years as manager. Of course, there are some who will say a man is only worth what he works for, but this whole region is what you might call dirt cheap. In a large town near here they are giving free matinees of eight reels, with one act of vaudeville, just to break the other fellow. My operator is the highest salaried one within a radius of twenty miles. When I see the show in the other theaters and compare it with our own and consider our poor facilities, consisting of five-year-old Edison machines, poor curtain, a worse piano (I cannot get the owner to buy new material), it makes me feel like calling the help together and tying up the house. Please pardon me for telling you my troubles, but I would like to hear from you and get your advice.

For very obvious reasons the request is made that all names be eliminated. I do not see what advice I can give this man, or what I could say that would have any effect on a man who would pay a manager who is using junk projectors and poor equipment all the way through, yet has the ability to work the S. R. O. sign overtime, such a ridiculous salary as $12 per week. It seems to me that a six-foot club is the only thing that would affect an owner of this type. Twelve dollars a week for a manager and eleven for an operator! And the operator has been there six years at that. Possibly in the next six years he might aspire to eleven fifty, if he behaves right good. It is a shame! No, I could not offer any advice in this case. For myself I know what I would do, and do it pretty quick, too. In just about two shakes of one shiver that owner would not have any more manager than a jackrabbit, or if I were the operator at eleven per I would quit even quicker than that. Why, man, you could make more money in the penitentiary whittling out canes to sell to visitors.

Quite True.

One, Snyder, surnamed "Snyder, the hatter," puts out some very excellent mottoes on neatly gotten-up cards. One of these reads:

"The graveyard is full of dead ones, get a move on."

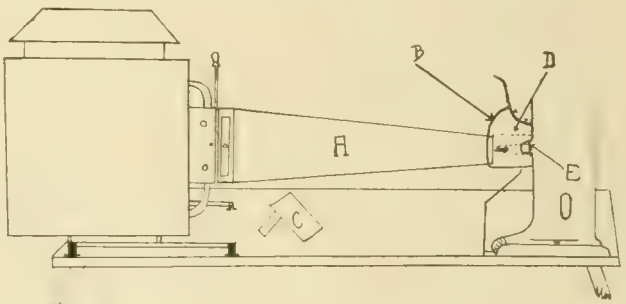
I would advise operators to read that motto both carefully and prayerfully. It is correct. It is absolutely right. The graveyard is full of dead ones, and if you do not want to be numbered among them, metaphorically at least, its up to you to get a hustle. Action is the thing which wins today. The man who gets ahead and pulls himself out of the I-get-the-scale crowd is the one who "gets a move on," is the one who works hard with his brain, whether he does with his hands or not. He is not of the kind to say, "Aw! what difference does it make whether I know how to measure a lens or not. That don't get me nuttin!" He is the one who is always ready for an argument, if, by arguing, he thinks he can learn something. He is the one who, when something occurs in the operating room in connection with his work which he does not understand, won't rest easy until he does understand it. He is the guy who is not worried about the union scale, because he don't intend to work for it very long anyhow; he wants more than the scale, and sooner or later he gets it. No "graveyard" for him, until he goes into a real one and takes his place among the spooks, where he will probably be a leader.

This is the worst trouble with operators, as a whole. They do not like to "get a move on." They prefer to remain with the dead ones, and put in their time cursing their "luck," and kicking at the boss because the boss wants results, which they are too infernally lazy to deliver.

A Life Portrayal.

W. A. Burton, Trail, British Columbia, sends in the following:

> The accompanying "life-portrayal" is that of a Power's Six, as, after this explanation, you will doubtless recognize. In it I have tried to illustrate the method by which I have successfully eliminated a lot of light ordinarily reflected from the cooling-plate into the operating room, at the same time doing away with the disagreeable glare which is so often rightly complained of. By the combination of "A," a long, home-made cone, "B," a piece of sheet metal bolted to upper film guard, and the automatic fire-shutter when in working position, the light is enclosed on the side nearest the operator as well as above, the shutter flap forming practically a continuation of the top side of the cone, which is really four-sided. "D" shows the shutter-flap, "E" a finger-hole for opening the gate latch, this latter protected against light-leakage by a strip rivetted on as per dotted lines at "E," which strip is pressed against the latch by a touch of the finger through opening "E." It is thus almost impossible to see the spot at all, but if the operator wants to see it very badly, I have provided at "C," a five-cent looking glass in a tin frame, about 2 x 4 inches, covered by a sheet of green gelatin cut to fit. This makes the examination of the spot easy on the eyes. The lower film shield is painted dead black.



With regard to your remarks on the size of the spot, issue of October 17, it is hardly worth while consuming space in corroboration, but your ideas coincide with mine, as I make it a point always to carry a large spot, which is the only insurance against shadows and purity of light. In my humble opinion amperage should, if necessary, be sacrificed to gain light purity, although I think the actual loss through using the large spot is really very small. The outside of the spot is not "useful light," as I term it, on account of the discoloration you mention, and it is better to waste it on the cooling-plate than project it to the screen.

With all of which I agree. I really wish some method could be devised for preventing the operator from seeing the spot at all. As long as he can see it he is going to gauge his light, to a certain extent, at least, by the spot and that is wrong. The light should be gauged wholly, solely and entirely by the picture, and it can easily be done, too, if you get accustomed to it. During the last year I was engaged in active work as operator I do not think I looked at the spot twice. It is hard on the eyes; also it is utterly useless. Brother Burton's remarks on the size of the spot are worthy of very serious consideration by operators. He is absolutely correct in all respects. San Francisco operators employ a method of enclosing the light beam even more complete than the one here described. It adds largely to the fireproofing, as carried out by the 'Frisco men, since it is utterly impossible for the film to get into the light beam.

A New Book.

The Moving Picture World is placing on the market a new book, by J. H. Hallberg, entitled "Motion Picture Electricity." The work contains 273 pages of text matter and illustrations, four of which are devoted to an autobiography of the author.

The general headings covered are: "Electricity," in which an exhaustive explanation of various terms is given, together with information regarding generators and transformers of various types; "Electrical Service," in which is set forth information concerning wiring systems and wattmeters; "Theater Wiring," which title is self-explanatory; "Direct Current Projection," in which the author sets forth his views regarding projection with direct current, together with an exhaustive treatise on his ideas with relation to setting the carbons; "Resistance," in which an explanation of the theory is supplied, together with information on the effect of various rheostat connections; "The Rheostat," in which that instrument is illustrated and explained; "D. C. Motor-Generator," in which the theory of the d. c. economizer is set forth, together with a description of the Hallberg device of that particular variety; "Alternating Current Projection," in which the author sets forth his views as to the alternating current arc at considerable length; "A. C. Economizer," which is largely devoted to the Hallberg economizer, as is also the following chapter, "The Hallberg Economizer"; "Westinghouse-Cooper Hewitt Rectifiers," in which the Westinghouse-Cooper Hewitt rectifier is described; "Isolated Electric Light Plants," in which information concerning those plants is set forth at some length; "Practical Suggestions," which contains, for the most part, tables, some of which are quite valuable; "Directions for the Use of Calcium Light," in which general directions are given, together with a description of the Model B gas making outfit.

Mr. Hallberg is to be congratulated upon the final publication of the work he began more than four years ago, and I trust he will reap due reward in return for his labor. The price of the book is $2,50.

A New Slide Process.

The Micagraphic Slide Company, Boston, Massachusetts, writes:

> We have been advised that you are interested in investigating new ideas having a bearing on projection. We enclose a sample micagraph for your inspection. This is an unbreakable lantern slide of extremely light weight, and its consequent advantages > are obvious. Will you kindly inspect and test this slide as we are desirous of obtaining your decision as to its value. In case of very low competition we are unable to meet prevailing prices, but the element of breakage is eliminated by our process, hence we believe the micagraph is, in the end, cheaper than glass, even though the initial investment is higher. We might add that we have supplied the Boston Operators' Union with a number of these slides to replace glass ones.

Referring to the illustration, the photograph is on what apparently is mica, protected by a cover sheet of the same material, the combined frame-mat being a heavy cardboard. Such a slide would, so far as the photograph is concerned, be, to all intents and purposes, unbreakable, though, of course, the frame would have no greater resistance than would any other cardboard about one-eighth of an inch thick. The proposition looks good to the editor. The prices quoted by the company are high, but I believe, should they make them in large quantities, this might be lessened somewhat, and, particularly in the case of lecturers, the thing is good, because one of the worst features of the lecture proposition lies in the danger of slide breakage, for the reason that a slide must necessarily remain in the light for a considerable length of time. I see no reason why the photographic emulsion should not stand up just as well on this material as on glass, and, barring that one possibility, without any elaborate tests, I pronounce the micagraph slide a high-class article, worthy of serious consideration by lecturers and others using lantern slides. The slide weighs less than half an ounce, and this, too, is an important item, especially to the traveling lecturer.

About to Bust.

C. E. Leininger, Akron, Ohio, comes at us thusly:

> I am nearly bursting, therefore must give vent to my feelings. I read so much in the department about the desirability of operators knowing all about electricity. Tell me why it is necessary for an operator to know so much about that subject when it does not help to put on good projection? In all your advice to examiners you were stiff on the electrical end, but said nothing about the machine. Not long ago I read where you, yourself, said you knew a man who was a first-class electrician, but whose projection was literally rotten. I, myself, knew a party who worked as electrician five or six years, and yet his projection was miserable. Now, tell me how it benefits the operator to be an electrician? When a manager employs an operator he wants a first-class picture, and I think the work of an operator begins at the switchboard, and not from there out. What difference does it make to an operator how a dynamo is wound, or whether it runs to the right or left, or how many field poles it has, or how a field transformer is constructed, or how many strands of wire is in a No. 4 or No. 6. Are you going to condemn Angelo because he did not know how many hairs there were in the brush he used, or Paderewski and Beethoven because they did not know all about the making of pianos; are you going to condemn Sousa because he did not understand the making of band instruments? Positively you are not. Therefore, why do you condemn the operator because he does not know all about electricity? Why should an operator be an electrician any more than a moulder should be a pattern maker, or a painter should be a carpenter? Now, Mr. Editor, I know very little about electricity, but I will go in an operating room with the best electrician you have in New York, and, all things being equal, if I don't put on as good a picture day in and day out I will pay for the supper.

Well! At first I was going to sit down on Brother Leininger, ker squush, but on second thought I will let the department fans attend to his case. Now, gentlemen, the question, as raised by the brother, is: Why should an operator understand electrical action, dynamo action, motor action, etc., any more than Angelo, the artist of immortal fame, should know the number of hairs in his brushes, or Paderewski know the mechanical construction of a piano? I will leave it to you, my brothers, with the privilege of sticking my oar in to sum the matter up later on.

One Dollar Prize.

A subscriber, St. Louis, Missouri, says:

> I will give one dollar for the most simple solution to the following problem: In a room 80 x 40 x 18, with a curtain located 70 feet from the film of a Simplex machine using a four-four lens of 6½-inch focus, located in the upper right-hand corner of the room, what must I do to project a picture having a field 12 x 16 centrally located on the wall (both stereo and motion picture) so that the picture will be clear and balanced to the eye of an observer standing in the lower left hand corner of the room. I know the solution and will act as judge.

This is a somewhat interesting problem, but in the first place a one dollar prize is not much of an inducement, and in the second place I could not follow out the prize idea for the very simple reason that I would be lending the department to what might, and very likely is, some personal purpose of the writer. Anyone who wishes to exercise his brains on this problem may do so and send the answer to the department, and if it is of sufficient interest it will be published.

Million Dollar Pier Lenses.

William W. Paxon, chief operator and electrician of the Million Dollar Pier, Atlantic City, N. J., forwards the following additional data concerning the lens system I spoke of recently. As I said, Brother Paxson is getting results. The day the editor was there he was too badly battered up to take very close notice of things, but nevertheless the picture at a casual glance looked very good, and our lens dopsters, yclept Brothers James, Griffiths and La Grow, are invited to exercise their ingenuity in explaining how it all happened. Here is the official data:

> Distance from crater to back condenser, 4 inches; distance between condensers 2¼ inches outside to outside—between the plano surfaces of the lenses; distance from crater to aperture 24½ inches; distance from crater to center of projection lens 23 inches; distance from front condenser to aperture plates 18 inches; focal length of condensers two 7½; focal length of projection lens 11½ P. F. (I am not exactly certain about this P. F. business. That is what it looks like. It certainly is not "E," and only by a stretch of the imagination could it be called "B." Come to dope the thing out, however, it cannot be P. F. because that would correspond to E. F. where only a single lens is used, therefore it must be a B. F. or an E. F. Ed). Distance from aperture to screen 215 feet; width of picture 16 feet.

The only item of uncertainty now is the width of the aperture. They have an old motiograph and a Simplex. The Simplex has been equipped with the latest style aperture, which is 29/32 of an inch wide. Now, whether these measurements are based on that width of aperture or on the old style 11/16 aperture I cannot say. However, there it is, and it is some puzzle, too, I think. I shall await with interest what the aforenamed gentlemen, and others who care to tackle this matter, have to say.

Twenty-five Cents Admission.

Ashcroft, British Columbia, writes:

> Business is very bad, on account of the war, but we still charge twenty-five cents admission. I hope the World will continue to fight for the raising of minimum admission to ten cents. I saw seven reels for a nickel recently. Just think of it! Is it not ridiculous? I watch all the articles on the subject of raising prices, and hope you will go to it strong.

Comment seems to be unnecessary, except to agree with the brother that it certainly is ridiculous to show seven reels of film for five cents. As a matter of fact, I do not believe there is any excuse for the five-cent show; ten cents is little enough, and for the latter sum a far better performance can be put on than is possible for a nickel. The trouble in the past has been that managers have expended more energy in trying to induce patronage through low prices and quantity than in trying to secure it at fair prices by giving high quality.

Another Carbon Saver.

F. J. Bevker, Tacoma, Washington, says:

I have a little invention in the line of a carbon saver which I wish to pass along to operators. Have been using the saver for a month and find it to work perfectly. Any operator can make them, and any operator is welcome to do so since he has my permission as patentee. If anybody wants to send me a cigar or two, all right. Here's the dope. Purchase some ¾ straight pipe couplings and ¾ pipe nipples 3 inches long, threaded on both ends. Screw on the couplings, then cut them in equal halves, and you will have two carbon savers which will do the work as well as those which cost two dollars a pair, and they will only stand you in about thirty cents. The ⅜ carbon goes in ¾ couplings by just trimming off a little. You screw the carbon in, which makes a perfect contact, and you can burn them down to almost ¼ inch.

Hum! Well I dunno. I pass this along for what it is worth, but, frankly, Brother Bevker, I am skeptical. It might and probably would work all right with low amperage, but when you put that screw-em-in proposition up against heavy amperage I imagine you would have trouble.

Condenser Dope.

J. F. Heise, Fort Totten, New York, writes:

I tried out a set of 6½-6½ meniscus-bi convex condensers and find that I get a clear field and about 25 per cent more light under the following conditions: distance center of condenser to aperture 16½ inches; distance center of crater to back condenser 3¾ inches; distance between condensers 3 16 inch; size of spot on cooling plate, 2 inches; objective lens 6½ e.f. I tried placing a 6½ plano convex behind the bi-convex, but without beneficial result. I then placed a 9½ plano-convex in front of the meniscus, but the results were not as good as with the meniscus-bi-convex combination.

The 6½ means us is, according to brother Griffiths, the equivalent of a 5½ plano-convex, therefore in order to maintain the e.f. of the condenser combination, as I understand it, you should have used a 5½ plano-convex behind the bi-convex when making the experiment. Glad to have your report my brother. Operators please take notice. Twenty-five per cent. more light is some item; also kindly observe the 2-inch spot it was done with.

With Regard to Geneva Movements.

R. W. Martin, Bellevue, Pennsylvania, contributes the following which I submit to operators and manufacturers for their consideration:

There seems to be such a vast variety of opinion on the subject of different intermittent movements that I begin to seriously doubt my own views, which same I have thus far never heard duplicated. If they are indeed so unique, it may be possible their appearance in print will be of value; at any rate they may be worth the editor's time reading them.

As I see it, the main defect in the star-and-cam type of intermittent, besides being too slow a movement, lies in the fact that the driving pin cannot be made, or at least maintained so that it will fit the slot of the star neatly. This causes play to exist between the pin and star when the star is off the lock. When the movement of the star starts, the pin first slides upon one side of the slot but, towards the middle of the movement, the positive inertia of the rapidly moving star and sprocket carries it ahead of the pin, and, because of the play between the pin and the slot, the pin moves to the other side of the slot and knocks up against it with considerable force, thus causing jar and shock to the mechanism. Towards the completion of the movement the speed of the star becomes slower than that of the pin, so that the pin again comes back to the first side of the slot, and there is more force, jar and shock. Some idea of the force of the shock can be had by running the machine at normal speed and trying to stop the noise by the brake action of pinching the sprocket axle with the thumb and forefinger. It can hardly be done. But this test will, nevertheless, clearly demonstrate that the noise is caused by the play of the pin in the slot near the middle of the movement. The force of the inertia of the star and sprocket is astounding, and indicates a source of damage which is usually disregarded, or, at most, considered as a legitimate part of the day's work. If the machine be speeded up to say three times normal, the hammering becomes terrific, and if speeded still higher sparks will eventually fly from the pin and star. But even when running at normal speed it is a familiar experience to stand twenty or thirty feet away, and hear the geneva making a noise like a gattling gun, and where there is noise there is waste and ruin. The damage to the mechanism is bad enough, but the jar and shock are transmitted to the sprocket teeth and gives to them a chiseling action similar to that of a rock drill, which causes them to bite into the film. The effect of this action would naturally be to cause fractures in the celluloid; not tears or indents such as would be caused by a steady pull, but fractures, and an examination of old films show many of them to be intact, except for slight fractures running from the corners of the perforations. But this in itself means that the life of the film is about ended. While this may sound rather iconoclastic, it may, nevertheless, have the effect of pointing out a source of trouble where it was not suspected to exist.

In printing this matter the editor is running the risk of a scrap with managers using this type of intermittent movement. We trust, however, that no manufacturer will feel that there is any intent in the publication other than to bring out the truth. If the fault in the star and cam type of intermittent is as serious as Brother Martin claims, then, of course, we all want to know it, for there are other types which can be adopted. Discussions of this kind are of value, and I invite operators and others interested to refute the above statements if they can. That this movement is one of the most satisfactory so far, is evidenced by its general adoption to so large an extent.

Widening the Shutter Blade.

J. B. Hine, Nashville, Tennessee, says:

Here is a little idea in connection with the shutter. In the Handbook and the department you instruct the operator to cut out cardboard shutters in experimenting as to the effect of widening or narrowing the blade. Here is an improvement on that idea. Procure a piece of Russia iron to match your shutter and cut a strip 1¼ inches wide and as long as the distance from Y to Z in the illustration. On this piece marked A in the illustration, cut two slots as indicated, cutting them as near the end as you can without weakening the piece. Now, with its center just on a line from the center of the shutter blade, to correspond with each slot, punch holes, and in these holes insert two small screws with nuts to clamp piece A to the shutter blade, being careful to have the heads of the screws on the outside of the shutter, where you can get at them. You may now change the width of the shutter blade at will. You can equip both or all three blades of your shutter thus if you desire. In order to test, so as to see whether your shutter blade is too narrow, first block up the fire shutter and project clear light; turn the shutter to where the intermittent just barely begins to move and then see if there is a faint outine of the top of the aperture on the screen. If so, your shutter is out. Now, turn the fly-wheel until the intermittent just ceases to move and if you see the same impression of the other side of the aperture on the screen then the shutter blade is too narrow and you will have travel ghost. Of course, you can get a new blade, but by the scheme I have set forth you will have a shutter blade to exactly suit the conditions your machine is working under, since you can alter the width of the blade at will. And now I am expecting to get landed on as Brother James and others were, but if so I will stand for it, and come back again when I think I have something of value.

No, my brother, you will not get landed on this time, because your idea is a good one. It is not new, but I think it has never been set forth in the department. It strikes me that it would not be at all a bad scheme for manufacturers themselves to put out a variable shutter blade something along the line suggested by Friend Hime. The thing is self-explanatory, and, beyond saying that it has the hearty approval of the editor, no comment is necessary. Oh, by the way, yes, there is, too. If you start to do this stunt you must first be sure your shutter blade is too narrow, else the adjustment will do you no good. On a machine of my own I would cut down the blades until they were a little too narrow, and then install this adjustment scheme.

A Strenuous Kick.

A St. Paul, Minnesota, operator recently sent the following to one of the daily papers of that city:

Some time since I noticed in your columns the kick of a grocery clerk concerning his long hours. I wonder if that purveyor of edibles knows anything about the hours some motion picture operators put in every day, in a close 7 x 8, and sometimes even smaller room, breathing air that would cause a self-respecting canine to sit on the end of his tail and howl for ozone, yes, and do it seven days a week at that. On top of this now comes a yelp that some of us actually get too much air and the Powers that Be actually have the spring steel nerve to want us to pay for a license giving us the inestimable privilege of earning our bread by the sweat of our brow in one of those undersized near-ovens. And this latter bright idea came into being because an operator left his door open in order to keep the temperature so he would not melt into a grease spot and run out through the cracks in the floor. Also, Mr. Grocery Clerk, let me tell you that some of us put in as much as eighteen hours a day, seven days in the week, in these imitation hereafters (minus only the brim-stone) and for seven and eight hours at a stretch we do not see or speak to a living soul. Why, even a yellow dog would get a glad hand if he appeared in the room. Mr. Grocery Clerk gets tired of waiting on customers! Try operating a projector for awhile, old man, and you would soon get tired of that tired feeling.

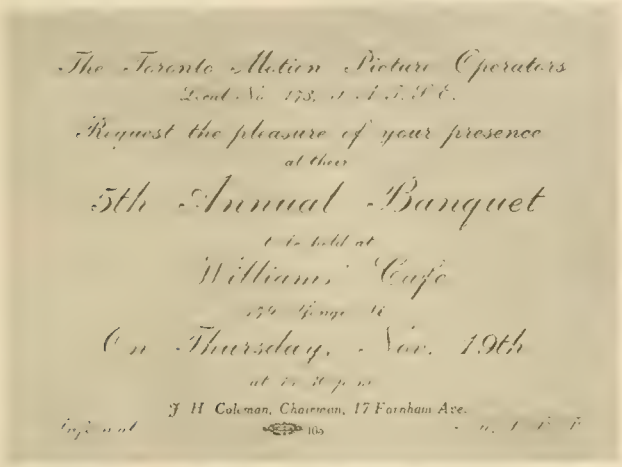
That is not exactly the way the St. Paul operator worded his kick to his paper, but it is the gist of the matter, set forth in little different words. "By the sweat of his brow" is good. I should suppose that it would be by the sweat of his all-over, the brow merely being an incident.

Operators Have Blow-Out.

The editor is in receipt of the following invitation from Local 173, I. A T S E, Toronto, Canada.



The Toronto Motion Picture Operators
Local No. 173, I. A. T. S. E.
Request the pleasure of your presence at their 5th Annual Banquet to be held at Williams' Cafe
174 Yonge St.
On Thursday, Nov. 19th
at 11:30 p. m.
J. H. Coleman, Chairman, 17 Fornham Ave.

Well, gentlemen, I would like to be with you and help dissect that banquet, but there are too many ohms resistance in the rheostat of distance, so I guess the voltage of my desire won't be able to force me through. Of course, all this will sound strange by the time this is published, because that will be quite some time hence, and the banquet will then be only a memory. Therefore, to put the matter right, I will wind up by saying I hope you had a howling good time.

No, I Can't.

North Tarrytown, New York, writes as follows:

> Now, you old Trouble-Fixer, here's my tale of woe. Our little meal ticket (theater) burned recently and I am minus a job. The manager says no matter where he goes I go too, but say, man, if he buys a place in your home-town I am stumped, unless I get busy at once; hence, will you please tell me when the next examination comes off and give me some idea of what the questions are like. I am a married man with five little kiddies to feed, therefore, you will understand my anxiety.

The brother also set forth considerable interesting data with regard to his work in the burned theater, but we are crowded for space just now. Examinations are held every day in New York City, but there is a long waiting list, and if you make application right now it will probably be at least a month before you would be called for examination. No, I cannot give you any idea at all of what the questions will be. They will depend altogether on the answers you make. For instance: should they ask a certain question concerning the rheostat, and you answer it in a way to convince the examiner you are thoroughly acquainted with the action of resistance, then he won't be likely to ask you much more on that topic, and the same is true of other things. The examiner asks questions calculated to bring out your knowledge concerning electrical action, and the questions he asks one man may be entirely different to those he will ask the next one.

The Manager's Viewpoint.

Recently I attended a performance in one of our very best Broadway Moving Picture Houses, remaining all through a matinee. The show lasted from 2:30 till 5, and all during that time I did not see a single discoloration of the light. This speaks very well indeed for the operator; also for the automatic arc controller he uses.

The first reel run, however, was a comedy, and, while the light was perfect and the speed not high enough to in any sense "ruin" the production, still it was too fast in some places and too slow in others. In other words, it was one of those films in which there should be a considerable variation in speed, yet the projector was left to pound along at the same speed throughout the entire reel.

During the intermission I spoke to the manager, calling his attention to the matter, intimating that it apparently indicated that the operator was running on a schedule, and that a time schedule and high-class work did not, and could not, be combined. He replied somewhat as follows: "I know that is the fact, Mr. Richardson, but here is the condition: If I instruct our operator to watch the film action and vary the speed, I necessarily, by, so doing, place the matter of speed entirely in his hands, which is what you advocate, and what for that matter is, or at least ought to be, correct practice, but here is the way I find it to work out: If the operator happens to have a 'date' or for any other reason wants to get through a little early, he will crowd the speed, and if I remonstrate, will put up an argument that the action of the film requires it, and what am I going to do? I know it is not true, but at the same time I cannot claim it to be anything more than a difference of opinion, or at least I cannot prove it to be anything else, unless the speed be excessively high, which the operator would not attempt. I have tried the two systems out thoroughly, and I have determined that, while the schedule has its drawbacks, and does not by any manner of means always bring out the best result, still it is in the long run better than placing the speed in the hands of the average operator."

Now here is a proposition that is not only bad, but it is exceedingly bad. Unquestionably and undoubtedly there is much truth in what this manager said. If operators could educate managers up to the point of placing the interpretation of the film in their hands they would have gained an enormously big point, and would have established their right to be considered as something more than mere mechanics. They would then be entitled to that consideration which is only given to men who are paid for the work of their brains, rather than the work of their hands, and this is one of the things I have been trying to get for the operator. But how is it going to be gotten when the operator himself, instead of taking pride in his work and giving all there is in him, is willing to ruin the results in order to gain a few minutes off his day's labor? I was particularly disappointed in this instance, because this is a high-class house, and one in which I did not expect anything of this sort. Yet I think, unquestionably, the manager was telling the even and exact truth; he impressed me that way, and, moreover, he is a gentleman in whose word I have confidence. If operators are satisfied to remain in the brick-layer class, and don't aspire to anything higher, why this is the way to go about fixing their status along that line. If, on the other hand, they want to climb out of the brick-layer class, and to be recognized as a really important cog in the wheel of affairs, they will have to think more of producing artistic results on the screen than they do of chopping five minutes off the day's work.

Baltimore Operators Will Dance.

Moving Picture Protective Operators' Union No. 161, Baltimore, Maryland, will give their fifth annual grand ball at Hazazer's Hall in that City, Monday evening, January 25. The Baltimore Union's annual balls have invariably been social and fraternal successes, and we presume the forthcoming high jinks will prove a duplicate in this respect of those that have gone before. The Baltimore Union is a live wire, carrying medium voltage, and we wish them success in all their various undertakings.

Many Plunks Ahead.

H. M. Cook, Jordan Valley, Oregon, writes:

> With reference to the Laemmle meniscus-bi-convex lenses and Preddy's condenser mount, diligent search through your advertising columns fail to reveal the address of their distributors. I am a new-comer in the field, and am only sorry I did not get hold of the WORLD sooner. I would have been a good many plunks ahead if I had, the aforesaid plunks having been spent in useless, amateurish experimenting. The condensers are wanted for use with a 4-inch lens and a calcium light.

You are not the only one who would benefit by reading the Moving Picture World carefully, and following its teaching with diligence. I will have the parties in question send their quotations.

Information Wanted.

Claude E. Hurd, Davison, Michigan, writes:

> Have a Power's Five, projecting 44 feet. By shoving the lens back until it just clears the shutter, we obtain a fairly good picture. Our operator claims to be a competent man, and says that by screwing an extension into the head of the machine and then putting the lens jacket into the extension the lens will come to a perfect focus. I would like your opinion on this matter. I am not very old in the picture business, but have had some experience with lenses, and cannot see what will be gained by this plan. Sorry I cannot give you the size of the lens, but it is not marked.

You are perfectly correct, Friend Hurd. Putting on an extension would not do any good. You are using a very short focal length lens, and evidently are right up to the limit of the possibilities of the machine itself, since in order to focus, the lens has to go back as far as it will go and clear the shutter. Your operator may be competent according to his understanding of that word, but he evidently has some things to learn about lens action. You would improve matters very greatly if you could get a longer throw, and use a longer focal length lens to protect the same size picture, and that is what I would advise you to do if you can arrange it. I would also advise you to send $2.50 to the Moving Picture World and get a copy of the Handbook, in which all these various matters, as well as hundreds of others, are fully explained. It is a book of 430 pages of text matter and illustrations, every line of which deals with subjects pertaining to practical projection, in a practical way.

Comments on the Films

Licensed.

THE ROSE AT THE DOOR (Edison), Dec. 8.—This is the third of "Olive's Opportunities," written by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, featuring Mabel Trunnelle as the gypsy girl. This is rather interesting in the main, but contains many superfluities, which have little to do with the continuity of the plot. It is also very melodramatic in many of its scenes, although there is quite a little originality evinced in the method adopted to circumvent the villains. A moderately interesting release.

Mrs. TRENWITH COMES HOME (Essanay), Dec. 8.—While this is a well played picture as far as the actors are concerned, the plot, and the theme of the plot borders on nastiness in some respects; perhaps it teaches a lesson to society women (who seldom see a picture), and who shirk their duties as a mother. Such pictures do not entertain the average spectator who is looking for entertainment, for a period of leisure, but rather send him away with a feeling of disgust for weak human nature.

IN DUTCH (Kalem), Dec. 8.—A farce comedy featuring John E. Brennan, Ethel Teare, Fred Hornby and Lee Hill. The action is on the slap-stick order and the general results gain some laughter, but for the most part it is made up of absurdities.

HE MADE HIS MARK (Lubin), Dec. 8.—Quite a laughable farce comedy produced by J. A. Murphy, from the scenario written by Epes Winthrop Sargent, in which Hank Peters (George Welch) kisses everything from the cow to the bell post, including his wife, who is interested in thumb prints, but suddenly develops an idea that there might be something in lip prints, and she lands Hank in an ingenuous way, with numerous proofs positive. On the same reel with "Dobs at the Shore."

DOBS AT THE SHORE (Lubin), Dec. 8.—A rough and tumble farce in which about the funniest feature is Babe Hardy, in a female character. A series of absurdities from start to finish. On the same reel with "He Made His Mark."

SAVED BY A WATCH (Selig), Dec. 8.—A Tom Mix western drama, starring himself, supported by Goldie Colwell, Leo D. Maloney, Inez Walker and numerous cowboys, outlaws, etc. This is the usual wild western drama, packed with hairbreadth escapes. Not much can be said in its favor.

A MATTER OF HIGH EXPLOSIVES (Edison), Dec. 9.—A Mark Swan comedy, featuring Bliss Milford. There are many little complications in this production which hold the close attention of the observer and eventually are productive of hilarious laughter. Those who assist in helping along the meritorious and enjoyable figurations are William Wadsworth, Cora Williams, Harry Linson, John Sturgeon and a large cast of supernumeraries. A fine comedy.

THE FABLE OF THE BUSH LEAGUE LOVER WHO FAILED TO QUALIFY (Essanay), Dec. 9.—A George Ade comedy that cannot help but make a hit with any audience. Homer Splivens (Wallace Beery), attempts to make love from a worse instruction than a correspondence school (he tried to dig it out from books), but somehow it did not work all to the good and he got into more trouble than a one-armed paper hanger afflicted with the hives. He tried but he tried. Moral: It has got to be done in just a certain way. Fine.

THE ABYSS (Selig), Dec. 9.—A picture which would be better left off the screen. It is immoral and morbid in conception. The acting and splendid photography are wasted.

THE ATHLETIC FAMILY (Vitagraph), Dec. 9.—Featuring William Shea and Kate Price, also Edna and Alice Nash as the twins. There is a whole lot of action introduced which is supposed to be comedy, and perhaps it is, but the audience does not seem to recognize it as such. William C. Jacobs is the responsible party as author and Edmond F. Stratton produced it.

FOR HER PEOPLE (Biograph), Dec. 10.—A nicely costumed little drama that is well acted and photographed. The plot is unique and interesting. Irene Howley is very good to look at as the queen and acts the part cleverly. The other principals are Kate Toncray, Jack Mulhall, Jos. McDermott and Irma Dawkins. It is a pleasing offering in every respect.

SOPHIE'S SWEETHEART (Essanay), Dec. 10.—This comedy shows how Slippery Slim and Mustang Pete have another fistic encounter and beat each other up while Sophie Clutts, for whose love they are battling, goes off and marries another man. Then Mustang and Slim go in search of something else to fight about. It is all very laughable.

PURE GOLD (Vitigraph), Dec. 10.—Joseph F. Whelan must be given credit for having written a very strong plot, which Ulysses Davis has most admirably directed. Anne Schaefer and William Duncan, two strong human characters, make of this picture one filled with intensity. The plot is laid amongst the rough and ready element which usually inhabit the hills of a new mining country. The photography is of the best sort. An exceptional one reel offering.

AND SHE NEVER KNEW (Biograph), Dec. 11.—A picture drama that contains a strong element of sentiment and pathos, telling the story of a lifetime, almost, that through deception saves a faithful and trusting woman from sorrow. Kate Bruce, Jack Young and Hector Sarno most ably portray the leading characters. This release appeals strongly to the better feelings.

THE BOLD BANDITTI AND THE RAH RAH BOYS (Kalem), Dec. 11.—A Lloyd V. Hamilton and Marshall Neilan comedy, which is very well constructed and mixes up college boys and a real blackhand gang, in a not only peculiarly funny but a rather serious way. It is well acted in every respect and the members of the cast deserve great credit for their natural and artistic make-ups. Lloyd V. Hamilton has the leading character. A very interesting comedy.

ON MOONSHINE MOUNTAIN (Lubin), Dec. 11.—About the ordinary interest obtains in this story of the moonshiner, as in those numerous ones which have preceeded it. There are one or two thrilling scenes which are reasonable. Vivid melodrama, which becomes tiresome, and a few absurdities spoil the merit of this picture. The acting is creditable and the wild scenery in the hills which has been beautifully photographed aid in making this release a fair one.

ONE KISS (Selig), Dec. 11.—A Maibelle Heikes Justice comedy, featuring John Lancaster. There is a large cast, including manicurists, chorus girls, etc., who are quite interesting to look at. Not much can be said in a favorable way about the direction. The scenes in the manicuring parlor are more foolish than funny. It does not cut much of a figure as a laugh producer.

A STRAND OF BLOND HAIR (Vitigraph), Dec. 11.—The complications which go to make up the plot of this comedy hang on a strand of blond hair, which a college boy surreptitiously obtains from the head of a beautiful blond in a foolish and impossible manner (but such is the license of comedy—don't stop to think). It is well produced scenically and acted artistically, with the exception of some exaggerations in reaching for laughs. It is, however, a good comedy entertainer.

SAVED BY HER CHEE-ILD (Biograph), Dec. 12.—A half reel picture that is full of funny stunts that the audience greeted with continuous laughter. A description of this release will be found on page 1530, date of Dec. 12, 1914. Written by Mr. George Blaisdell. It is on the same reel with "Diogenes' Weekly No. 13."

DIOGENES' WEEKLY NO. 13 (Biograph), Dec. 12.—A burlesque on the weekly topical which made a hit with the audience. A description of which will be found in connection with the above and on the same page. Both are innovations.

THE STENOGRAPHER (Edison), Dec. 12.—The first of the series, "The Girl Who Earns Her Living," written by Mark Swan and directed by Ashley Miller, featuring Gertrude McCoy. The other principals in the cast are Edith Peters, Charles Sutton, Richard Tucker, Robert Brower and John Sturgeon. The acting on the part of all is praiseworthy. The plot holds the closest interest and there does not seem to be a superfluous incident in the production. A most excellent offering.

BRONCHO BILLY'S DAD (Essanay), Dec. 12.—A western drama in which Mr. Anderson keeps things moving as usual. There is much intensity contained in this plot and the acting is nicely sustained. Seldom do you see so much suspense exhibited in a picture. It holds the closest attention to the last scene, where a little surprise clears up everything happily. Mr. Anderson is to be congratulated on his splendid work in this production.

THE FLYING FREIGHT'S CAPTIVE (Kalem), Dec. 12.—Fifth of the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series, featuring Helen Holmes, as the telegraph operator at Lone Point. It is full of thrills and swift action especially where Helen makes her flying leap from a train running at high speed. It is very edifying to see Miss Holmes frustrate a gang of yeggmen and recover valuable jewels. The acting is clever and the photography is first class. As a sensational feature this can be marked up as No. 1.

SAM AND THE BULLY (Lubin), Dec. 12.—A comedy which causes the audience to break right out in laughter, from the pen of Epes Winthrop Sargent. It is very original in conception, and is a travesty on correspondence schools. It is worked out to a very funny finish. On the same reel with "The Fresh Air Cure."

THE FRESH AIR CURE (Lubin), Dec. 12.—A boisterous comedy written by C. Doty Hobart. This is also a burlesque on the "sleep out of doors thing." It is funny to view the avalanche of trouble the author and director have hatched up for the people in the cast, who handle it bravely. On the same reel with "Sam and the Bully."

THE SOUL MATE (Selig), Dec. 12.—A pictureplay in the plot of which a girl who is superstitious causes herself and admirer a great deal of trouble by being imposed upon by a charlatan palmist. Most of the scenes are laid in a laundry, in which the girl is an employee. The story is quite entertaining and eventually ends happily, with Sally receiving a good lesson regarding superstition. It is mildly melodramatic in nature.

THE FLIRT (Edison), Dec. 14.—A comedy, featuring William Wadsworth, of a frothy nature, introducing several attractive lady members of the stock in real giddy parts. The scenes are located along babbling brooks, beautiful dells, cow pastures and the sea shore, where Mr. Flirt meets with just punishment. It can be considered a medium comedy release.

THE SHERIFF OF WILLOW GULCH (Biograph), Dec. 14.—A most unusual story that embraces in its complications, not only a political struggle for honors in a small community, but it develops the sacrifices a real man makes for the girl he loves. He goes out of her life but his influence unselfishly results in bringing good to the girl and her lover. There are some thrilling scenes and the entire cast are effective in their work. A very interesting release.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 83 (Selig), Dec. 14.—Interesting scenes showing how the war demands in Europe for sugar are being supplied by the United States—visualizing how the cane is being cut in the fields, carted to the mills, manufactured into sugar and syrup and shipped to Europe; scenes at Sing Sing prison, introducing Thomas Mott Osborne, the millionaire warden, getting into action; an Indian relic fair at San Diego, California, and replicas of old adobe towns and villages of the cliff dwellers, etc., etc. Very educational.

MADAME DOUBLE X (Essanay), Dec. 14.—A burlesque on the famous play "Madame X," introducing Wallace Beery in the titulary role. Perhaps some of the spectators can appreciate and enjoy this picture, but those who have seen the dramatic version, produced by the original cast of "Madame X," will probably consider that it is repulsive, rather than amusing; especially in the ending. Ridiculous action is not productive of real comedy; although it gains laughs from the few.

THE GREATER LOVE (Vitagraph), Dec. 14.—A story that contains little interest for the general observer, written by Elizabeth R. Carpenter and produced by Theodore Marston. About the only commendable features of the story are embraced in the acting of Dorothy Kelly, James Morrison, Mary Maurice and George Cooper, assisted by others. There are some beautiful scenes which are clearly photographed. The ending is not a satisfactory one—not even natural. It is about an average offering.

Licensed Specials

SUNSHINE AND SHADOWS (Vitagraph), Dec. 8.—A special feature in two parts, filled with adventure and anguish, written by Mrs. Owen Bronson and directed by Van Dyke Brooke. Spitefulness on the part of one of the leading characters furnishes the major portion of the incidents in this plot, which at the finale end in a happy reunion, midst sunshine and love. The acting is admirable, particularly on the part of Mr. James and Norma Talmadge. A very entertaining number.

COUSIN PONS (Biograph), Dec. 8.—Picturized from Balzac's wonderful drama of the same caption, in two parts. It is a marvellous analysis of human motives, in which the power of money illustrates the good or the sinister in human beings. Charles H. Mailes renders a superior pantomimic conception of Sylvian (Cousin) Pons. Edward Cecil as Schmucke, Pon's best friend, and A. C. Marston, the covetous housekeeper, are perfection in make-up and rendition; in fact the whole cast is a revelation in the silent drama. Honore de Balzac would feel honored were it possible for him to view this picture.

THE MYSTERY OF THE YELLOW SUNBONNET (Kalem), Dec. 9.—A two act drama featuring Alice Hollister, supported by Harry Millarde, Helen Lindroth, Henry Hallam and others. This is a production that contains many meritorious scenes, also weak spots. The main theme is weak in construction and lacking in the punch quality. The ending is satisfactory but exceedingly conventional.

A RECENT CONFEDERATE VICTORY (Lubin), Dec. 9.—Emmet Campbell Hall has written a very strong story in two reels, produced by John E. Ince. The cast is made up of very prominent Lubin actors, Bartley McCullum, Gilbert Ely, Percy Winter, John E. Ince, John Delson, Harry Loomes, Doris Heywood, Harry Norman and Mrs. Adler, all old time legitimate actors. The production is splendidly rendered in all details, but the plot is weak in many points; however, it is very entertaining.

THE MAN FROM THE SEA (Lubin), Dec. 10.—A two-reel picturization made by George Terwilliger from a sketch which made quite a hit in vaudeville, written by Paul Dickey and Charles Goddard. Mr. Terwilliger has taken advantage of the possibilities which can be used and elaborated the plot cleverly. This is a strong story and is splendidly acted by Kempton Greene, Earle Metcalfe and Anna Luther. Many beautiful exterior scenes adorn this picture in which there is much thrilling action. It is a superior release.

EVERY INCH A KING (Essanay), Dec. 11.—A two-part pictureplay dominated by romantic scenes, with a plot filled with court intrigue, war and love—jealousy also cuts quite a figure and helps to make interesting action. Francis X. Bushman is very impressive as the king and is most ably assisted by Beverly Bayne, Helen Dunbar, Lilliam Drew, Lester Cuneo and Bryant Washburn. This is a finely acted, well photographed and pleasing production.

HOW TO DO IT AND WHY; OR CUTEY AT COLLEGE (Vitagraph), Dec. 12.—A special feature in two parts by Roy McCardell, produced by Wally Van. This might be termed a real comedy, although many foolish things are indulged in. Harry Morey makes good in the part of "Buttin," the book agent, who is equal to all emergencies (for the cash in advance). Wally Van is a close second as the hard-up college boy, who works for his uncle (Albert Roccardi), through his weakness—spiritualism—for his spending money. It is a well acted and laughable release.

THE LURE O' THE WINDIGO (Selig), Dec. 14.—An exceedingly melodramatic two-part picture with the scenes laid in the North woods; written by Maibelle Heikes Justice. "The Lure o' the Windigo" is a superstition existing among the Cree and Algonquin Indians, inhabiting the North woods. The scenes are attractive and well photographed. The acting is adequate on the part of all in the cast. As far as the plot is concerned it contains many things that are not conducive to a wholesome picture. Those who enjoy melodramatic and morbid scenes will find edification in this release.

THE SMUGGLERS OF LONE ISLE (Kalem), Dec. 14.—This is claimed to be a two act modern drama, featuring Marin Sais. They have pasted on the wrong label; it should have been melodrama and melodrama of the worst order. It embraces in its action all the sensational scenes possible to conceive. The actors work hard to make good in their parts, and succeed. The camera man sustained his role admirably and it is edifying to see that, in the finale, George and his wife are reunited.

Independent.

THE HOP SMUGGLERS (Reliance), Nov. 27.—Another newspaper story in which Irene Hunt plays the girl reporter in search of a beat. She leads to a round-up of some opium smugglers, who make a practice of floating the dope across a river on small boards. The photography and action are good and this makes on the whole a pleasing yarn of the kind.

SHERMAN WAS RIGHT (Royal), Dec. 5.—A military burlesque with some very funny moments in it. Louis Simon appears as Napoleon and leads his force of men to battle. Bombs are fired out of beer barrels and trick photography is employed to help out the action. A good burlesque number.

IN THE CONSERVATORY (Princess), Dec. 11.—A society mystery, involving the theft and recovery of some stolen gems. The plot is particularly pleasing because it contains a good surprise feature, something difficult to achieve. This holds the attention well.

WHEN EAST MEETS WEST (Thanhouser), Dec. 13.—A scenic number, depicting the rugged topography of Yellowstone Park, with a love story thrown in. The young hero rescues the girl after she has fallen over a cliff. This is especially pleasing from a pictorial standpoint, though the story is also interesting.

THE HOUSE BREAKERS (Komic), Dec. 13.—There's a good hearty laugh when the lucky "hero" hands over the two burglars to the police. They had crossed and one thought the other on the wrong route. A little discussion has resulted in both lying unconscious on the floor—the girl and her Mamma have heard the noise and have been wondering whether the "hero" would come out of it safely—he had been behind a chair, but had come out when he saw that both of the thugs were taking the count. Ed Dillon is the director and the "hero." It makes a good comic offering.

OUR MUTUAL GIRL, NO. 48 (Reliance), Dec. 14.—William Faversham tells the Mutual Girl a story illustrating what kind of a hawk his new play is about. The hawk is a gambler and the story, rather rough, is well acted and realistic. The producer made his intention get over effectively; his skill is apparent in the management and sets of the picture.

AT DAWN (Majestic), Dec. 15.—An unusual picture and one that will be counted a strong offering by most spectators—it gets over well; there's nothing dead about it as a story. The theme might be said to be a few truthful reflections on a well-marked type of character. The man of the picture is at first a school teacher in America and is hunting a fortune. He has persuaded the niece of a rich old woman with good sense that he loves her; but the aunt knows how to handle the situation and the man goes to the Philippines. He has now married a native girl and is a beach-comber. The aunt dies; the girl writes that she is free and rich and is coming. The beach-comber kills the native woman, who loves him, and waits. But an army officer, with a sergeant, happens into the hut and finds the corpse. They take the culprit out with a rope and when the girl comes tell her that her lover is dead—"the climate is bad in those parts." It holds most strongly; is well acted and the scene making is of the best.

HER YOUNGER SISTER (Beauty), Dec. 15.—A photoplay with a poignant note in it. The cranky old father insists on the elder sister postponing her wedding ten years until the younger sister grows up; the latter then wins the lover for herself. This is well photographed and pictures life as it sometimes goes.

A JOKE ON YELLENTOWN (Reliance), Dec. 16.—A cowboy yarn with the laugh on the punchers who thought it fun to scare two sleepy tramps. It was produced by Arthur Mackley; has a clearly-told story; is convincingly acted and will be enjoyed by all, but more by those who have not seen too many other offerings with stories more or less like this.

THE SILENT WAY (American), Dec. 16.—An unusual story, nicely handled throughout, with Winifred Greenwood, Ed Coxen and George Field in the cast. The scenic effects are fine and the plot original; it pictures how a tribe of Indians make away with a sick girl and restore her to health. A good offering.

HOGAN'S ANNUAL SPREE (Keystone), Dec. 17.—Murray goes on a spree in this number. The opening scenes are very funny. He steals a turkey from a bar room. During the pursuit he invades a house and dons a Santa Claus suit, locking the head of the head of the house in a closet. The latter scenes are fairly amusing; the photography is good throughout.

TRAPPED BY HELIOGRAPH (American), Dec. 18.—In which a bright girl learns to flash messages by use of the heliograph. She employs this knowledge in saving her soldier lover and the paymaster's funds. The plot is not very strong but the scenes are well photographed.

CARMAN'S ROMANCE (Sterling), Dec. 21.—A juvenile offering of about the average interest. The main situation is where the two rival boys fall into the well. Little Billy and the girl rescue them with great difficulty. The photography is good.

FOR I HAVE FAILED (Nestor), Dec. 22.—Featuring Murdock MacQuarrie as the owner of a large factory who disguises as a workman and labors among his own men. This has a good humanitarian motive and at once catches the interest. It could very well have been expanded into a strong two-reel subject, but is interesting as it stands.

VIVIAN'S BEAUTY TEST (Crystal), Dec. 22.—A beach comedy in which Vivian makes a hit at the resort hotel. She dresses up two homely wives and makes herself as unattractive as possible to fool the flirtatious husbands. A good idea presented in a fairly interesting way. The photography is good.

INNOCENT DAD (Sterling), Dec. 24.—A burlesque offering with John E. Brennan and Dot Gould in the cast. This is a reiteration of numerous stunts that have been done frequently; it is well photographed but has not much novelty in the main situations.

THE RUSTLER OUTWITTED (Frontier), Dec. 26.—A Western offering of about average merit, in which a plucky girl rounds up the head of a cattle-rustling gang. The photography is clear and the story well constructed.

HER MOTHER'S VOICE (Royal), Dec. 26.—An extremely humorous number, which has a lot of fun with the lady-vocalist theme. The girl inherits her mother's voice, which is hard to listen to. Her singing is mistaken for the fire whistle and creates great consternation. This is full of laughable moments.

WHIFFLES MISSES MRS. WIFFLES (Pathe).—Our old friend gets jealous again and the result is a fair to good farce offering.

VALLEY OF THE BOURNE (Pathe).—On the same reel is this scenic. Pathe scenics have been termed "the best we have." This is a very beautiful picture.

JOE'S RETRIBUTION (Warner's).—A one-reel Premier offering whose hero is very jealous. He doesn't wait to find that Fred is his sweetheart's brother, but knocks him on the head at the first chance. Thinking he has killed his man he flees, becomes a tramp and goes crazy. His mind comes back in the hospital there have been some house on fire scenes which are the pictures reason for being and concludes that it is better to go home and take his punishment. He finds that the girl's brother is unhurt and he is forgiven. Not a very strong story the acting is acceptable.

THE CHAMPEEN DETECTIVE (Warner's).—A laughable farce under the Superba brand featuring Charles De Forest as a lightning-change sleuth. It is fresh enough and is lively enough to make an excellent offering.

BANGS BURGLAR ALARM (Warner's).—A one-reel Evans farce in which the inventor of a burglar alarm is absent from home and his wife buys a set of thief catchers for the windows. It is not a new theme; but has new incidents and makes a very fair farcical story.

WADDLING WILLIE (Warner's).—A Pike's Peak Company farce in which a tramp dreams he gets a job as a chauffeur for a lady. He can't make the car go at first and later it chases him over a wide tract of country. Eccentric camera work materially adds to the fun and it is a very fair comic offering.

O'BRIEN FINDS A WAY (Warner's).—O'Brien has a daughter, is a widower and loves a widow. He has little money; but inherits a farm only to find that it is a sandy tract. His daughter's beau tells him how to tie all kinds of fruit to the scrub trees and sell the tract, so he lets the young people get married. The money he intrusts to the "widdie" and gets ready to meet her at the church. She hears of a fine tract of land for sale and as an investment, buys back the farm. It makes a fair to good offering.

O YOU POP (Warner's).—A single reel from Starlight studio with a farce in which the girl's lover, whom Dad dislikes, makes up as a woman and flirts with the old man. He is found out and there's a speedy chase.

Independent Specials

ON THE LEDGE (Reliance), Dec. 12.—The suspense in this two-reel picture is good and has an unusual quality. Two children are separated while very young. The boy has become rich and can find nothing of his sister, who, less fortunate, is a servant in a house, it chances, near the brother's office. The nearness of the two and the chances of their missing each other make the picture, and it holds well, although some of the business is not wholly convincing as likely.

THE OLD MAID (Majestic), Dec. 13.—A two-reel picture of sentiment made under the direction of John O'Brien and giving the dream memories of an old maid—her broken love story. The time is when spinning wheels were in use and the costuming adds to the quaint effect of the story. The story can not be said to have much power; but its sentiment will strongly appeal to many. The acting is good—Blanche Sweet has the leading role. The scenes are often pretty.

IN TUNE (American), Dec. 14.—This two-reel offering pictures a number of events in the life of a young novelist whose stenographer becomes more to him than his society-loving wife. Besides writing, the novelist conducts a large business, the nature of which is not made very clear. A dishonest clerk in the office induces him to sign away some valuable bonds, but the stenographer traces the crime to its perpetrator. The wife dies and the novelist marries the girl. Ed Coxen, Winifred Greenwood and Charlotte Burton play the leading roles in this. It is well-photographed and makes a story of about average interest.

THE MASTER KEY (Universal Special), Dec. 14.—Fifth episode. The plot takes on new interest in this instalment. Ruth arrives in San Francisco and goes to a hotel with Mrs. Darnell and George. Wilkerson follows. The girl is spirited away to Chinatown when she learns of the villainy on foot. The scenes in Chinatown are mysterious and full of thrills. Dore arrives after recovering from the bridge accident. He finds the papers which Ruth had secreted in a bureau at the hotel and begins an active effort to locate her. This is full of interest.

THE BARRIER OF FLAMES (Thanhouser), Dec. 15.—The big feature of this two-reel picture is not the story, but the incidents and especially the work of Shep, a collie, that acts in an astonishingly intelligent way and is the center of both excitement and pathos. He is the means of bringing rescue to the Kidlet, shut up in a burning house very well handled scenes. It is the picture in which Shep jumps out of the second story window into a fire net. The best scenes of the picture are worthy of a better story; but the offering is one that will make an especially strong appeal to all kinds of audiences. The direction is by John Harvey.

THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT (Bison), Dec. 19.—A two-reel holiday number, featuring Murdock MacQuarrie as a tramp who asks food at a home while a Christmas tree is in course of preparation. He is given food and tells his story. This is pictured fully and shows him as a sailor enduring many hardships. Later his wife thinks him dead and he loses all track of his family. Of course it turns out that he is in the home of his daughter and grandchildren. A pretty Christmas yarn, full of holiday spirit and with an affecting close. The photography is not up to the standard in places.

THE KING AND THE MAN (Victor), Dec. 21.—Adventure 4 of the Terence O'Rourke series, featuring Warren Kerrigan as the soldier of fortune and the young king. He handles the double role effectively and there are some good examples of double exposure in this. Edna Maison is attractive as the princess for whose happiness Terence fights. The story is entertaining and well presented; it demonstrates how Terence exposes a plot to assassinate the young king. A good number.

THE CALL OF THE WAVES (Gold Seal), Dec. 22.—A two-reel number featuring Grace Cunard, who wrote the scenario, and Frances Ford. He falls in love with her as a fisher maiden, but his father thinks the match beneath him. The girl is taken up by a woman who puts her in the best society. The social atmosphere is fairly well suggested. The Monte Carlo scenes are quite picturesque and well-photographed. It is not indicated very clearly where the girl got her wealth of clothes and jewels, unless they came as a gift from the rich woman friend. In the end the lovers are united. This is not very convincing as developed but has numerous entertaining features.

THE FORTUNES OF MARGARET (Eclair), Dec. 23.—A two-reel offering of the old style melodramatic type, with Isabel Daintry as the girl. Her brother steals the father's mortgage money and the girl is blamed. She goes to the city, where she is followed by her brother and father, the latter getting a job in the street-cleaning department. Margaret marries and the brother is later shot while trying to rob her home. The photography in this offering is not quite up to standard in places. The story is of an obvious type, but rounds up with a fair degree of interest.

THE PASSING OF TWO-GUN HICKS (Broncho), Dec. 23.—Rarely does a photoplay carry with it the strong quality of interest that is found in this two-reel number by Ince and Sullivan. Wm. S. Hart makes a compelling figure as Two-Gun Hicks, who fears no man, but who does respect a decent woman. Leona Hutton is also good in the part of the drunkard's wife. From the opening scenes in the Western bar the story gets a strong hold of the observer. It is the best type of Western drama, finely pictured and convincing. The climax, which is really no climax at all, shows Hicks riding away in the dusk "for her sake." A strong, artistic offering.

LAST OF THE LINE (Domino), Dec. 24.—An unusual picture in two reels with an old Indian chief as the leading character. His son, "the last of the line," has been to college and has learned to drink; he is a sot and the old man's heart is broken. The old Indian is fine. He has all the dignity and grandeur that one could want. The story is strongly dramatic and moving to a degree. This is a very desirable offering, one that will justify itself in any house in the wide world. Its authors, T. H. Ince and C. G. Sullivan, can take much credit to themselves.

THE BIG SISTER'S CHRISTMAS (Rex), Dec. 24.—A two-reel number, written by Ruth Ann Baldwin and produced by Otis Turner. It is as pretty a Christmas story as one could wish, the cast including Anna Little, Herbert Rawlinson, Helen Leslie, Wm. Worthington and Dick Rosson. The manner in which the young artist brings happiness to the home of the poor family on Christmas eve is pictured in a natural, appealing fashion. Anna Little handles the part of the big sister in a quiet, effective way and Herbert Rawlinson is also at his best as the artist. The story moves up to strong close. A superior Christmas production.

IN THE SAGEBUSH COUNTRY (Kaybee), Dec. 25.—A splendid two-reel Western story, with Wm. S. Hart in the leading role of the bandit and Rhea Mitchell playing the girl. This is another instance in which the producers, Ince and Sullivan, have gotten away from the commonplace and brought out some vigorous, characteristic scenes, full of interesting episodes. The photography and scenic effects are very good and the production an entertaining one throughout.

THE ACCUSATION (Victor), Dec. 25.—A two-reel drama, produced by Harry C. Myers. The story concerns two men in love with a wealthy girl, Harry Myers, Brinsley Shaw and Rosemary Theby playing the leading parts. Burwell is secretly married to a poor woman and they have a child. He intimidates his wife and induces her to say the hero is father of her child. This situation, it can be seen, is fraught with interest. The dramatic possibilities are not quite realized, but the story is handled with a fair degree of strength and holds the attention. The scenes are well photographed.

THE LAW OF THE RANGE (101 Bison), Dec. 26.—A three-reel story adapted from a Western novel. The cast includes William Clifford, Val Paul, Sherman Bainbridge, Marie Walcamp and others. Some splendid views of the Western cattle ranges are shown. The story is that of a fierce range war between a big cattle raiser and a small one. It is well photographed and has a realistic twang to it all the way through. The opening scenes are a little long but when the story comes it is one of big movement and exciting incidents. The averted hanging had fine suspense. Some of the court scenes were humorous. The story itself is not particularly satisfying, but serves merely as a thread upon which to hang the exciting incidents.

THE HEART OF A MAN (Warner's).—A two-reel offering by the Pike's Peak Company giving a very interesting melodramatic story of mining days in the West. The girl locates a rich mine. At once there's a great in-rush of prospectors, saloon men and rough characters to the new city—this group of scenes is of great interest, they have been very well done. There are three especially tough characters who make trouble and because they are ordered out of the district determine on revenge. The girl is the owner of the only wooden house in the city and this they set on fire after tying up the man who loves her. How he gets loose and rescues her from the flames make a good melodramatic act. It is a picture that will be liked. The director is Otis B. Thayer.

THE STAR OF GENIUS (Pathe).—A three-reel offering made by the Paris company and providing a well-acted and entertaining story of the Latin quarter and of the love of a musical composer for a dancer. She leaves him for a viscount, who, in turn, abandons her. The musician can not live without her and is made happy when she comes back to him. It has good scenes and seems to have a convincing atmosphere of Paris Bohemian circles.

"Without Hope"

Flamingo Film Company's Initial Offering Is Elaine Stern's Comedy Drama Which Won the $500 Prize.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

SPECTATORS have been waiting for the appearance of the Flamingo (Sawyer) offerings with some expectancy. It will be remembered that two prizes were recently awarded by the Flamingo company for scenarios in the Telegraph-Chartered Theaters contest and that the second prize of $500 was awarded to a young lady whose excellent work has been attracting attention and who not only won the last Vitagraph competition, but even more recently has landed a substantial prize from Collier's Weekly for fiction. This company is also attracting favorable attention on account of its determination to specialize in mpltiple-reel comedy offerings that shall be substantial and as free as possible from a certain rough and tumble action that is beginning to pall a bit. We expect excellent things from this company.

The central character in this first picture is Hope, slavey in a cheap eating house. Its idea is to show that Hope, in spite of her being a gawk, is in her own blundering way a very useful personage. Two stories are opened separately and as they are developed are more and more closely interlocked. One of these stories is about a new formula for noiseless powder which a pair of foreign spies want to steal. One of these foreigners is acting as head waiter at the restaurant where Hope is kitchen girl. His love for the cashier is the talk of the place. Hope gets fired for inefficiency and is found sniffling on the street by two old maids who adopt her, because they want to be "big sisters." The daughter of the inventor of the noiseless powder is in love with the nephew of these two old maids. This nephew is a playwright and being much interested in Hope, who is now neatly dressed by his two aunts, but is behaving like one of "nature's naturals," he and she become friends.

Nephew gets a job as waiter at a hotel on the Hudson in order to be near his sweetheart, who is there with her father, the inventor, but his new job is not romantic enough and she falls in love with a foreign count—the head waiter at Hope's old restaurant who has taken the title and is there to steal the formula from the inventor. The young lover is in despair. His aunts, by chance, come to the same hotel and bring Hope, still acting lige the infant terrible that she is.

Gaston, the waiter, has a confederate with him, a beautiful woman who is flirting with the inventor. The coming of the aunts with Hope , who recognizes Gaston, brings a decided change in the situation. She has soon her own love affair to attend to; but Gaston's threat to kill her if she gives him and his confederate away, has made her mad and she sees to it that as many know just who he ii as possible. Hope elopes with the call boy and their first breakfast is amusing, especially as to the egg that almost got away and had to be caught under a cup—it fairly peeped. Then she brings the cashier to confound Gaston and his accomplice.

There is some delightful characterization in this production and the excellent photographic work deserves commendation. Many beautiful exteriors and carefully designed interiors testify to the skill of the producer.

Carlton Completes Production of "The Idler"

LLOYD B. CARLETON, as director for the Box Office Attractions Company, William Fox, the head, has completed his screen production of "The Idler" in five parts. The photoplay is said to be the most pretentious and artistic yet attempted by Mr. Carleton. To quote a theatrical term, "the production is lavishly mounted, no expense being spared to secure the desired effects." Praise is due Carleton, for the deft hand of the able director is revealed to advantage. An excellent cast of players appear in "The Idler," the principal members being Catherine Countiss, Charles Richman, Claire Whitney and Walter Hitchcock. The scenario is the work of Roy L. McCardell. Mr. Carleton is now preparing to present a film version of "The Girl I Left Behind Me," Franklyn Files and David Belasco's triumph of western life. Robert Edeson will appear as the star in this piece, assisted by a well balanced company of photoplayers. When "The Girl I Left Behind Me" was originally presented at the Empire theater, as the opening attraction, Carleton was a member of Charles Frohman's producing staff, so he is familiar with the production to the most minute detail.

ANDREWS COMPANY GETS SIX-CENT VERDICT.

A verdict of six cents damages was awarded the A. H. Andrews Company, manufacturers of opera chairs, at Chicago, against the Phoenix Amusement Company, of New York City, which operates the Washington theater at Amsterdam avenue and 149th street, that city, in Judge Mack's division of the United States District Court last week.

The action arose out of a contract entered into in October, 1910, under which the complainant agreed to furnish 1,600 opera chairs of a specified design for the moving picture theater for $3.85 each. A facsimile of President Washington's head was to have been inlaid on the chairs. The contract was not carried out and both sides claimed the other breached the contract.

At the first trial of the suit several months ago William Fox, secretary and treasurer of the amusement company, was unable to produce certain correspondence bearing on the agreements and the plaintiff secured a verdict of $2,000, which was subsequently set aside when the correspondence was found. The introduction of the additional testimony at the trial just concluded placed a different light on the transactions and the jury returned the nominal verdict noted above.

"The Beautiful Unknown"

Three-Reel Costume Romance Featuring Yona Landowska in Sensational Dance in Last Reel—Victor-Universal.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

A PICTURE in the costume of about the time of Louis XIII and set in some half-fairyland court. Matt Moore plays the part of a young king just come of age and boyishly irresponsible until the Princess Yona stirs his heart—we think that the love story part of the picture is not true to the same boyish spirit found in that scene in which the young king, taking his place for the first time at the kingdom's staid council, and boy-like having a laugh under his sleeve at the importance and ceremony of the reverend counselors. Their enthusiastically expressed loyalty to him is a good contrast and a fine piece of dramatic work.

The boy is fond of the ladies and the Queen-Mother wants to get him married. Three princesses come from a neighboring kingdom and the oldest of them, played by Yona Landowska, is destined to be his wife and queen. He meets them courteously and excuses himself to pay a visit to the opera. The princess feels slighted and goes into a pretty pet, marches off upstairs with her shoulders perked up in disdain. Then, for a lark, she, too, will go to the opera and be a dancer. She has to bribe the manager to let her; but the king falls in love at first sight. She won't let him in her dressing room and he orders her to appear at a court fete soon to be held. She comes at the very last when he has begun to grow irritable and her costume is rather breezy—it will, perhaps, make a strong hit in certain houses where there is a sporting clientele. It is a pretty picture, all through and has many graceful scenes. Much of the dancing and acting, too, are very good.

FILM SERVICE CONTRACT IN COURT.

A suit involving some of the leading photoplay houses in Cincinnati was recently fought out before Judge Gorman of the Common Pleas Court. McMahan & Jackson, operating the Norwood Amusement Company, Levy & Meiss, operating the Liberty and Columbia theaters, J. St. Clair Glassmeyer, operating the Imperial, and the Forest Amusement Company, sued for an injunction restraining the Park Theater Company and the Arcade Theater Company, which operate a house in Avondale, from exhibiting "Life's Shop Window," "St. Elmo," "Will o' the Wisp" and "The Thief," on the ground that the theaters named had an exclusive contract with the Box Office Attraction Company of New York, controlling the productions named, for the Cincinnati rights to those productions.

It was alleged in the petition that the two defendant companies were given a like contract on November 18, and immediately began to advertise the coming attractions. The injunction was refused by the court on the ground that there was no showing that the two defendant companies had any knowledge of the alleged prior contract. The Orpheum Theater, of Walnut Hills, is involved in the matter, as it had the pictures named scheduled for exhibition on its program under lease of the two defendant companies. The plaintiffs have announced their intention of fighting the matter to a finish in order to protect their rights, while the defendants are equally determined, and there the matter rests at present, with the victory, for the time being, at least, with the defendants.

Arthur Evers

ARTHUR EVERS, now playing heavies for the Dyreda Art Film corporation at their Yonkers studio, under the direction of J. Searle Dawley, has had valuable experience, both on the legitimate stage and in acting in motion pictures. During the season of 1907-8 Mr. Evers came prominently before the New York theater-going public, through a series of most excellent portrayals in varied heavy roles in the support of Edna May Spooner at Keith and Proctor's Fifth Avenue theater. Of a handsome and imposing appearance, tall and distinguished, Mr. Evers has had the best of training in divers branches of the drama, embracing the classic, comic, melodramatic and stock and he has taken full advantage of his many opportunities, so that he is able to cope with any variety of roles, although he is by no means satisfied with his present attainments, and with each new role he strives valiantly to achieve a higher perfection. Mr. Evers is a college man, is an athlete in every sense of the word and excels in roles that demand strength, power and virility. Mr. Evers has recently starred in the five-reel production of the "Dancer and the King," which was produced by the Shuberts at the Peerless studios at Fort Lee, N. J. His portrayal of the Count in the picturization of "Camille" received much favorable comment from the press.

"NEPTUNE'S DAUGHTER" AND "SHADOWS" DELIGHT ENGLISH NOBILITY.

A distinguished audience witnessed the first English exhibition of "Neptune's Daughter" and the two-real feature, "Shadows," in which King Baggot enacts ten roles by means of wonderful double and triple exposures, on the morning of November 24th, in Shaftesbury Pavilion, London. The private showing was held under the auspices of the Trans-Atlantic Film Company, Ltd. George "Universal" Stevenson did the honors.

Among those present were Sir Lionel Garden, the Marchioness of Townsend, Viscount and Lady Dangan, Miss Hiram Maxim, Capt. Leslie Peacocke, Sr.; Mr. St. John Brenon, Father of Herbert Brenon, Mr. E. M. Heron, Alderman Joseph May, the Mayor of St. Pancras, Sir Henry Dalziel, P. C., J. P.; Sir George Alexander, David Davis, Esq., J. P., C.; Councillor Lloyd Taylor, J. P.; J. Elliot, Esq., J. P., and Mr. William O'Malley, M. P.

Sir Lionel and Lady Carden expressed their delight at the wonderful artistry of "Neptune's Daughter" and "Shadows" and promised to call again soon at Universal House to attend a showing of the regular Universal program. The double program of "Neptune's Daughter" and the King Baggot feature, "Shadows," created the sensation of the month in London cinematographic circles, as witness "Stroller's" review in the Kinematograph Weekly:

"I was riveted to my seat by the continuous stream of sensations and beautiful photographs. A mint of money must have been spent in producing the pictures, and I have no hesitation in recommending the pictures as features which it will pay every showman to consider carefully."

Cinema and Bioscope reviewers were equally enthusiastic over the Shaftesbury Pavilion showing of "Neptune's Daughter" and "Shadows" and at the conclusion of the private viewing Universal House, at 39 Oxford street, buzzed with the hum of enthusiasm which bespeaks and presages success.

W. J. WATKINS UNDERGOES APPENDICAL OPERATON.

"The Scorpion's Sting"

Kalem Leaves Ending Off Two-Part Picture—National Board of Censorship Asks Public to Send Right Ending In.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

A NOVEL and interest-stimulating feature is offered by Kalem in its new, two-reel picture, "The Scorpion's Sting." It will attract attention and may stir things up a bit by the way it leaves to the hearts and consciences of spectators that serious question: How should the heroine act when she finds that she has fallen in love with, yes, and accepted, the "scorpion," her father's murderer? It asks, too, whether the man who very loosely may be termed the hero should give himself up to the police and be hanged, seeing he so truly loves the girl, or whether, from his own viewpoint, he should flee again and live a life of remorse. Then, after the picture has had its innings at questioning, the National Board of Censorship comes to the bat with a request to the average spectator to send in to it at 70 Fifth avenue the right answer to either or both questions.

The Censor Board wants to know how the people look at these things and is anxious to have as many replies as possible. If the people will reply, and the question is so interesting that we believe they will, the offering will excite discussion for itself and will provide the Board with valuable data on the effect that pictures are making on spectators. It is a scheme that ought to have a fair trial and we feel quite sure that while some may criticise the plot as not wholly convincing, the ending situation is interesting enough to amply justify the Kalem Company, the Exhibitor, the Spectator and the Censor Board.

The picture shows first how the girl came to be accused of the murder of her father and how she was acquitted by the jury for insufficient evidence. The thug who, in evening clothes, did the murder escapes and later the girl and he meet at a country hotel and fall in love with each other. The ring the man gives her is part of the loot and is the very one that she had quarreled with her father about, because he would not let her have it. She thinks at first that she ought to take the man out in the canoe and upset it so that both might drown together. The man at first thinks that he ought to tell her that he had been a burglar and that now, after meeting her, has determined to live a straight life. We are not told by the picture what happened, but are asked what, in our opinion, should be done by each. C. Doty Hobart is the author. Robert T. Vignola directed it. Alice Hollister and Harry Millarde play the leads.

Bliss Milford With August

EDWIN AUGUST started last week on the first picture which he will make for the Kinetophote, for which he will produce as well as star in several famous stories. There was some mystery at the Kinetophote offices as to just what Mr. August is working on, but it was intimated that the Kinetophote has a brand new thing for the screen which will be produced shortly by Mr. August who, it is said, is performing a motion picture stunt which no other actor has ever before been called upon to do.

However, one fact which came from the Kinetophote offices this week, is that Bliss Milford, who has been playing leads with the Edison Company for three years, will be leading woman for Mr. August and will appear in his first production for the Kinetophote.

Bliss Milford.

Miss Milford comes with a fine record and a long list of films in which she has appeared. During the time that she played with the Edison she appeared in 125 different films and her roles ran the whole gamut from pathos to broad farce and comedy.

She was on the stage for five years previous to going into pictures, and had such success on Broadway that she was chosen to create the part of Sally Ann in Charles Dillingham's production of "The Candy Shop." After that "Sentimental Sally," in which she starred, was written for her.

Miss Milford was born in Fargo, North Dakota, although she spent few years in that cold town of the North. Her family removed to New Orleans while she was a young child, and she was later taken to Chicago, where she was educated.

Still in her early twenties, Miss Milford has to her credit, in addition to her stage work, the leading women's parts in such films as "Grand Opera in Rubeville," "Two's Company," "The Drama and Heyville," "Christmas Eve," "The Grandfather," "A Dollar Saved is a Dollar Earned," "A Matter of High Explosives," and others.

BESLEY MOTION PICTURE COMPANY SUED.

James W. Bailey has secured an attachment against the Captain Besley Motion Picture Company for $693 on assigned claims of operators formerly employed by the film company in South America in the production of films.

The plaintiff alleged that the film company, which has a studio at Broadway and 216th street, New York City, was about to remove its plant from this jurisdiction and averred he might experience difficulty in collecting his claim unless the court issued the attachment.

Pauline Wrecked At Sea In Motor Boat Takes Refuge On Target and Is Bombarded By Big Gun Boats—Eclectic.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

PAULINE has had the last of her perils and her adventures that have entertained us so long are now ended—she is going to marry Harry and settle down. The villain has got hisn—over the rail he goes into the sea, splash! His white hands wave for a moment above the dark waters and sink, Gurgle!—he is gone for ever.

But joking aside, this series of Pauline's perils has taken wonderfully well. Spectators have enjoyed them far and wide and the best thing about the series is the fact that whereas it tells a continued story, the whole idea has been so easy to comprehend and remember that one didn't need to see every installment to thoroughly enjoy any one of the set that he chanced to come upon. They were at once separate meldodramas and continued adventures of the same heroine, hero and villain and have distinctly added to the popularity of the three leading players who it happens were already rich in reputation and didn't need to have their popularity added to. Pearl White, Paul Panzer and Crane Wilbur are almost as well known as anybody in picturedom.

It was fitting that the last peril should be the most astonishing—they were all astonishing and the author Charles Goddard, has won a great reputation as a wonder at thinking up novel and exciting situations. In this installment the villainous guardian tampers with a plug in a motor boat. Pauline, woman like, proud of her newly acquired ability to run a motor boat, would go out alone to show Harry that she needed no help. The continual jarring of the engine loosens the plug and the boat fills with water while far out at sea. Her nearest refuge is an old scow with what looks like a big sign erected on it. On this Pauline takes refuge and none too soon; for her motor boat founders. She is not there long before some of Uncle Sam's dreadnoughts out in the offing begin to belch smoke through their big guns and shot after shot smashes through the target. A couple of shots hit the scow and it begins to sink. Pauline has her dog with her and she writes a note to the officers and the dog dives off with it. He is seen, picked up and Pauline is rescued. But the guardian had come to grief through not wanting to pay a skipper fifty thousand cold dollars demanded as hush money, and beginning a fight, is thrown overboard to drown.

SAM SPEDON GETS A CANE.

At the ball of the New York Exhibitors, Sam Spedon, publicity manager of the Vitagraph Company, was presented with a finely finished walking stick, tipped with silver. On a band of the same metal is an inscription which sets forth that the stick is "Presented to Sam Spedon by the Motion Picture Association of Greater New York." It was at the luncheon given by the exhibitors to their guests that the little ceremony took place. Daniel Frohman, who, by the way, is getting a lot of experience these days in presentation functions, expressed the sentiments of the exhibitors and spoke of their regard for the popular publicity man of the Vitagraph Company.

H. B. Kester

ONE of the most talked of men in the moving picture business of Pittsburgh, Pa., is H. B. Kester, proprietor of the East End Cameraphone theater. Being one of the most progressive and alert moving picture men in this district, his ability has received recognition from the Pittsburgh Screen Club, the organization brought into existence recently by the local moving picture folk, he being elected president. Mr. Kester was born in Brantford, Ontario, Canada, in 1872. From the year 1895 until 1901 he traveled for the Harper Illustrating Syndicate and in 1901 he settled in Pittsburgh, being employed by the Pittsburgh Coal Company in the capacity of chief accountant for T. N. Barnsdall until he got interested in the moving picture business.

H. B. Kester.

In the year of 1909 the Cameraphone talking pictures were introduced in Pittsburgh. The firm which introduced these pictures opened three theaters, one in Fifth avenue, one on the South Side district of Pittsburgh and one in the East End district of Pittsburgh. This undertaking soon after proved a failure and dropped out of business. Mr. Kester who has always been known by his friends as a wide-awake man, saw an opportunity to get into the moving picture business through this firm failing so he joined partnership with W. C. Beatty and took over two of these theatres, the one in Fifth avenue and the one in the East End. Soon after they opened a third theater, in Cleveland, Ohio. Shortly after this, Mr. Kester sold his interest in the Fifth avenue and Cleveland houses, taking over the East End house for himself. The first year of this new undertaking he hired a man to manage this theater which had a seating capacity of 350 and business increased so rapidly that he thought it best to manage it himself. This theater now has a seating capacity of 1,000.

Mr. Kester was the first man to run a ten-cent show daily in Pittsburgh and also one of the first to show pictures in a lighted house, and one of the first to purify the air with the Ozone machine. He paid $450 for this machine which now sells for about $35.

Mr. Kester is unstintingly devoting much of his time to further the interests of the Pittsburgh Screen Club, whose principal object is to better conditions in the local motion picture business. The proprietor of Cameraphone has an affable temperament, is a keen observer of human nature and is ideally equipped to deal with the public, qualifications that stand him in good stead in his business ventures. There is no new idea that springs up in this field that will not receive his careful consideration.

A CAMERAMAN-DIRECTOR.

Ray C. Smallwood, who is directing the pictures in which Ethel Grandin will appear in the United Film Service, has the distinction of being one of the few directors who operate their own cameras while directing the action of their pictures. Not satisfied with this distinction, he writes most of his own stories, drives his own automobile while making exteriors and in his spare time supervises the factory work and cuts up his own stories. While not employed in the above capacities, Smallwood spends his leisure time in getting a much-earned eight hours' sleep each night.

JAMES F. FAIRMAN AT LIBERTY.

James F. Fairman, for some time past connected with a motion picture publication and, prior to that, advertising manager for Motor Boat and other trade publications, is at liberty. Mr. Fairman's knowledge of the motion picture business and advertising in general should render his services of value to some motion picture company. He can be addressed at this office.

"She Was His Mother"

Three-Reel Imp Offering Picturizing Poem In Which Illegitimate Son Takes Mother's Part Against Father.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE poem which Herbert Brenon and his Imp players, including Frank Shea, Violet Mersereau, and Hobart Henley, have picturized in these three reels have a tensely dramatic climax. The son born out of wedlock after a country love affair which is lightly sketched, merely suggested in fact, has killed his father and is on trial for his life. The opening scenes simply showed the two young people together, the father ordering the girl out of the house and her abandonment, and then registered the fact that she is a mother starving in squalid circumstances. She is in despair and is stepping off the dock with the child in her arm; but is seen by a woman in an automobile. It is soon plain that this woman who at first seemed so kindly, persuaded the girl to accept her aid and hospitality, is only a kind of dive keeper, high-toned but unmistakable.

Scene from "She Was His Mother." (Universal).

The girl has now her own home where she keeps the child, but in her room there is a telephone which now and then, even while she is teaching her child to say his prayers, calls her to scenes of quite a different nature. The truth of this situation is not clear, and although the director has been careful to show the merest sketch of what was needed to get his meaning over, the truth of it is there—a pretty woman who it seems wants to be clean, smirching her soul day by day in orgies, where she is as hilarious as any. These scenes will be wholly truthful where the spectator supplies his own corrective knowledge of the human heart and that is why these scenes are not wholly clear.

One night the man who betrayed her (he is now a political power) comes in the room and at once she, with a shudder, escapes. He follows and finds her with the child—his child—and it ends with his abducting it. The woman now grows careless and sinks till she is a tattered street musician. Twenty years have passed. The boy has been brought up by the father and they are good friends. They are coming from the grand house together and an old woman begs alms. She recognizes the man as her husband, but is treated with scorn. This the young man hears and infuriated, strangles his father on the spot.

At the trial (he has kept his mother's name out) the jury is about to retire when the mother rushes forward and madly shouts the relationship. They demand that she go on the stand and her story makes them weep. Here the dramatic suspense ends, but the director continues showing how the jury's voting went before acquittal. He justifies his added film by the humanity and character drawing in the jury room.

It hardly needs be said that the story is pretty well acted and that the picture is full of good things and is clearly photographed.

"As a Man Sows"

A Five-Part Subject of Exceeding Beauty to Be Released By the Sawyer Film Corporation.

FROM a photographic point of view "As a Man Sows," a five-part feature subject, now ready for release by the Sawyer Film Corporation of New York, is as beautiful as any picture the writer has been fortunate enough to see in some time. We understand that it was made by the Aquilla Company of Italy and, consequently, it possesses a wealth of rare views, interior and exterior, which seem to be just a little bit beyond what our domestic producers are able to secure.

The value of this picture does not depend altogether upon its photographic qualities, however. In point of portrayal it has distinct merit. The story opens strong, commanding instant interest, and is well sustained to the end by the good acting of the several characters. The finale is quite satisfactory for the reason that the villain is properly punished for his misdeeds.

According to the story Hugo Gaspard, a bank cashier, squanders the funds of his bank and, threatened with an investigation which will disclose his peculations, endeavors to make it appear that the bank has been robbed. In doing this he fatally wounds the night watchman and escapes. Some days later the police find the remains of a man who has been killed by a train and the body is identified as that of Gaspard, whereupon Gaspard, the real Gaspard changes his name and continues his criminal career.

Twenty years later Gaspard's wife, now known as Graham, and her son, an artist, are living in affluance upon money inherited. The daughter of the night watchman killed by Gaspard has become a successful actress. The young folk fall in love, but when the actress returns to the city to begin rehearsals the young artist must accompany her and there he falls deeply in debt.

Appealing to his mother for funds, he obtains them after some difficulty and is told not to come again. About this time Gaspard, now known as Ralston, is told by his accomplice of a chance to make a rich haul. He is subsequently led to what proves to be the home of his wife by the accomplice's daughter. In robbing the house he shoots the wife, who discovers him, and escapes. The son is charged with the crime, but through the cleverness of the actress, who happens upon a clue to the real criminal, Ralston is caught in his own trap and is killed by a bomb by which he hoped to do away with his accuser.

The artist and actress finally marry and are seen in most delightful surroundings with the mother, who has concealed from her son the story of his father's crime.

Scene from "As a Man Sows" (Sawyer).

There are thrills sufficient and moments of suspense in a frequency to satisfy all tastes. As the initial issue of Sawyer under the new company title it will mark the era of better quality which that concern has inaugurated.

"The Bomb-Boy"

A Three-Reel Farce Featuring Ernest Traux as Messenger Boy Who Has Comical Hair-Raising Adventures—Pathe American.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE unexpected is always trump in a picture like "The Bomb-Boy," a three-reel farce by the American Pathe, and its producer, George FitzMaurice, has placed many changes on it in his showing the New York adventures of that bomb, given to the messenger in a hat-box, to take from a ship on which a grand duke had come, to a Fourteenth street address of Russian nihilists. It has plenty of chances to go off; but doesn't—not yet. At the end of the third reel there is a big explosion that shows of what stuff our bombs are made of; but the spectator has been watching that bandbox being treated as though it held only a picture-hat—bombs don't get treated that way every day.

The picture has other interests, too, that provide fun of another kind, fun that depends on character. The messenger is in love; but there's another guy with money, quite a roll while it lasts and Ernie concludes that it isn't any use bucking against a millionaire. He was wishing he could get a little money together when the call comes from a lady who has just been warned that the cops are likely to investigate her baggage, for they suspect her, coming at the same time with the Russian grand duke, she being well known as a nihilist. She slips the bomb into a hat just passed by Uncle Sam and the boy takes it. After a few ordinary adventures—part of the day's work—he gets it to Fourteenth street; but is surprised to see a pistol in the hand of the man who comes to the door. So he sneaks back; crawls in through a window; hears them coming and hides in a closet. We and he, too, expect the door of this to be opened; but it doesn't and Ernie hears the whole plot. It would have been all right if the old man hadn't heard him getting out the window. He does manage to escape, but they "are on" and then comes his hard time getting to the grand duke who "is busy"—a gay party with bottles. By diplomacy, by dodging like a greased pig and other ingenious tricks he manages to get into the room in time to shout, "It goes off at seven"—it being two seconds of the fateful hour at that instant. From the chafing dish, the bomb goes out of the window. The butler who had tried to stop him still has his coat and has to hold it for him. The big roll the grand duke has given has no denominations small enough for a tip so the butler doesn't get any. The gem-set decoration which has been hung around his neck is quite attractive to the girl who has been jilted by the rich guy for two prettier ladies who pick his pocket. Last of all, is a most amusing comedy scene. A good offering.

MINDIL ADVISES MUTUAL.

Harry E. Aitken, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, has called in the services of a publicity specialist, Philip Mindil, to act in an advisory capacity for "Runaway June," the new George Randolph Chester serial which the Reliance is about to put out. Mindil organized the elaborate publicity department of the Mutual and is now conducting a general publicity bureau in the Times building. The Reliance will require a large portion of his time from now on.

"The Crucible"

Marguerite Clark Is Seen to Advantage in a Five-Part Famous Players Adaptation.

THE Famous Players released on December 14 a five-part adaptation of "The Crucible," a drama by Mark Lee Luther. The story is a domestic tragedy, a struggle against adverse circumstances—of the strong love of a mother for one daughter and her nearly unaccountable neglect and seeming hate for the second. There are many good character drawings of the inhabitants of a small community—from the stern magistrate who dispenses what he considers justice, to the wayward young woman who serves a term in a reformatory and on her release seeks wider fields for exploitations.

Miss Clark has the role of Jean, the unfavored daughter. We see her under widely varying environments—as the petted child of a father who brings her up as a boy, and whose death robs her of her only protector; as the recipient of abuse from a mother and sister whose unamiable attitudes toward her are almost beyond belief; as an inmate of a reformatory; as a girl of the city fighting an apparently losing battle for existence, and as the woman who is loved by a man of whom she fears herself unworthy. It is a fine portrayal. There are a good sprinkling of lighter moments, as when she shifts the baskets at the picnic, to the dismay of her sister and her sister's sweetheart and also to the eminent satisfaction of the elderly beau and the spinster. There are, too, many sidelights on the darker side of life—of despair, of happiness shortlived, and of final triumph.

Scene from "The Crucible" (Famous Players).

Helen Hall as the village character, the woman who takes her sentence to the reformatory with the same abandon as that with which she witnesses the departure from her of the weak young man whom she had lured from his wife, makes one of the hits of the piece. If the part be one which makes sympathy out of the question, we are bound to admire the art with which she interprets the part.

Harold Lockwood is Craig, the young man whose sketching and camping trip to the country is enlivened by the short visit of the escaped refuge prisoner, and whose wise advice as to returning is so unexpectedly accepted. Mr. Lockwood has a most desirable part, and he most acceptably fills it. The role of the weak husband likewise is well taken. Justina Johnson is Amelia Fanshaw, the daughter whose welfare is the sole object of the mother's thoughts. Like the interpretation of Mrs. Fanshaw, by Lucy Parker, her work is adequately responsive to the demands of the part.

The story will interest steadily, by the continuity and variety of its action. There are moments that stir, most unexpectedly, for instance, where the hardened, if not hard-hearted, refuge matron kisses good-bye the girl who has saved as well as given her trouble. There is a depth of pathos in the situation where Jean, a year after her disappearance from the man she loves, sits on a bench and weeps. It is the same spot to which in her few happy days she and her lover had come. In her distraction she had not taken note of the fact he had preceded her to the old bench. There are dramatic occurrences at the reformatory, the exteriors of which, by the way, were made at the Bedford institution in New York State.

"Any Woman's Choice"

An Absorbing Domestic Photodrama in Two Parts by Essanay, With an Original and Stirring Finale.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

I HAVE confidence that I am not shooting wide of the bulls-eye when I predict for "Any Woman's Choice" instant approval and much praise at the hands of the intelligent patrons of moving pictures.

Right at the start, I must voice the opinion that the title chosen is not appropriate for this photoplay. It is indefinite, and does not at all indicate the nature of the story. "Which Man?" would have hit the nail on the head exactly. A cracking good story, however, can never be marred by the title, and, in this case, the result is a startling surprise; for the big interrogation mark on the screen, as the last scene fades out, places the solution of a knotty question in the care of every man and woman who views it.

It is a long time since I have seen a story so well and connectedly told by moving pictures as in "Any Woman's Choice," where only five sub-titles or announcements are used in a length of 2,000 feet of film. This means big praise for the scenario, which has been adapted from the Munsey magazines.

Another feature of this gripping story is the concentration of the action on four characters—The Man (Bryant Washburn), The Woman (Beverly Bayne), The Mutual Friend (Francis X. Bushman), and The Other Woman (Helen Dunbar). Mr. Bushman has a delicate role to play. Where a man is the mutual friend of a man and woman, who have just been married, and has betrayed a more tender feeling for the woman than mere friendship before her marriage, he places himself in a most trying position when he elects to make his home with the newly-weds. The ethics which must be observed under such circumstances cause us to follow every movement and glance of The Mutual Friend with hawk-like interest. We are ready to pounce on him with talon and beak on the slightest infringement of strictest propriety. Mr. Bushman has borne this well in mind during the trial of The Mutual Friend by fire. But did my eyes deceive me on one occasion? Did, or did not, The Mutual Friend of both husband and wife kiss the wife full on the mouth, on one occasion of emotional stress? I have a lingering suspicion that he did, at the close of a scene that has been cut with lightning swiftness. If so, I suppose the lapse from strict ethical rules must be attributed to Mr. Bushman's devotion to art, in that he wishes to remind us of mere man's frailty. We don't blame him if he did.

Miss Bayne is seen to fine advantage in the strong part of The Woman. The varying moods of this delightfully good and much tried gentlewoman are expressed with refined art. The Man, as presented by Bryant Washburn, is one of human clay, as most real men are. The demigod has no place on the stage or screen. In Mr. Washburn's care, The Man rises to lofty heights at times, just as he is shown to sink to ignominious smallness. Miss Dunbar's characterization of The Other Woman shows a clear conception of the part and well considered expression.

The Woman loves The Man and The Mutual Friend, and becomes the wife of the former. The Mutual Friend consents to live with them.

Before a year passes, The Man spends much of his time with The Other Woman, while his wife pines in loneliness. To relieve this she plays bridge with a fashionable set and loses heavily. The Other Woman buys The Woman's I. O. U.'s and holds them as a menace. In the meantime The Mutual Friend, who has discovered the tragedy in the lives of The Man and The Woman, leaves their home.

In desperation at the threat of The Other Woman to expose her to her husband, The Woman goes to The Mutual Friend for assistance. The latter takes up the I. O. U.'s after denouncing The Other Woman, and accompanies The Woman to her home. There The Man confronts them with a pistol, but is brought to his knees by the terrible denunciation of The Mutual Friend. Thoroughly repentant, The Man offers to go away and leave them in their happiness. The Mutual Friend refuses, seeing that The Woman is still in love with her husband, and suggests that The Woman shall choose between them and that the other man shall leave forever. The release date is set for Christmas Day.

Harry Harvey

HARRY HARVEY, for several years a producer of first-class feature films for leading corporations throughout the East and West, has returned to work as director with the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, of Long Beach, California, following a vacation. He is esteemed by cinema experts as one of the most talented leaders in film manufacturing, and is now producing a three-reel Balboa feature film, "The Light In a Woman's Eyes," written by the company's scenario editor, F. M. Wiltermood, the drama being built around the episode of a world-famous eye specialist being compelled at pistol point to perform an operation on a blind woman the renowned savant had jilted in his youth.

Harry Harvey.

Director Harvey, twelve years ago, began work as a producer with the Idoloscope company in New York. Since that time he has been, during long engagements, a director for the American Multoscope Company, the Edison, Camerphone Pathe Freres, Yankee Film Company, Gaumont (in France), Solax, Kay-Bee, Reliance, Frontier and other film corporations.

The scenario of Mr. Harvey's present production was evolved by Editor Wiltermood from one of his experiences as a newspaper reporter in Chicago fifteen years ago, when he wrote a long report of his interview with Dr. Lorenz, the celebrated specialist, following his operation on Lolita Armour, daughter of the millionaire meat packer, for congenital hip disease. While musing recently on his former newspaper work, Mr. Wiltermood remembered the Lorenz interview and at once wrote the three-reel drama, creating a highly original, tragically thrilling climax, wherein the heavy character is forced to perform an operation on a beautiful blind woman's eyes and restore her sight, the surgeon's act being one of reparation for his former evil treatment of the woman.

SMALLWOOD COMPANY TO LOS ANGELES.

The Smallwood Film Corporation, producers of Grandin Films in the United Film Service, will within a few days' time send a company to Los Angeles for the winter months. Ray C. Smallwood, Miss Ethel Grandin and John Brownell, among others, will make the trip to California. Arrangements have already been made for a studio where the company will make two-reel comedy dramas featuring Miss Grandin.

"The Crimson Moth"

Two-Reel Biograph Clearly Tells a Story That Holds and at Times Strongly Moves.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Biograph Company will release on December 29 a two-part subject that tells an interesting story. There are in "The Crimson Moth" several situations that stir the heart; and it may be remarked in passing that one of the best of these has been reserved for the final scene —a scene that, as the picture fades, leaves the spectator under the spell of the drama. The story deals with an old family tradition, or superstition—that whenever a crimson moth appears to a Huntington it means his death is near. A nephew of the head of the Huntingtons comes to an accidental end in his attempt to take advantage of the legend by shocking unto death the one relative that stands between him and the Huntington wealth. Jeffrey Huntington, the son, has a weak heart. The nephew dyes with ink the wings of a moth and releases it in Jeffrey's room. He nearly accomplishes his object; but he also slips and falls to the ground to his own death.

In the beginning of the story Jeffrey has been ordered South to build up a treacherous heart. The nephew, a physician in a hospital, is in love with a nurse, Ann Morton. He jilts Ann when it seems to him the chances favor the death both of father and son. When Jeffrey some time later returns to his home city he receives from his cousin a curt announcement of his father's death. He is carried to a hospital; it falls to Ann to care for him. Jeffrey later declares his love for Ann; she is interested, but says she can only promise to try to love her patient, her former experience being fresh in mind. After the marriage, the nephew, who is living in the family mansion, tries to win as the wife the woman he had rejected as the maid. Jeffrey witnesses the pleading, but does not note the counter-rejection. He is in this state of mind when he sees in his room the crimson moth.

George Morgan is Jeffrey, Louise Vale is Ann, Jack Drumier is the elder Huntington and Franklin Ritchie the nephew. It is a strong quaret. The picture is finely staged. The exteriors fit the atmosphere of the story—there is a great palace and there are spacious grounds. The interiors are Biograph. Some of the more effective of the scenes are of the fireside, all in black and white. It is here that Ann reads from the old book the story of the Huntingtons, which we see exemplified in the costume of the period by the three principals—a bold and striking conception.

Then there are the declaration of love in the hospital; the capture by the nephew of the moth and the dyeing of its wings; the scene in the house where the husband doubts while the wife is making up her mind that it is her husband she really loves; the capture of the moth by the wife and her discovery of the trick that has been perpetrated; of her looking from the window and seeing below the dead body of the man who had rejected her and whom she had repulsed; of the finding by the husband in the hand of the dead man the note from his wife in which she declared it was her husband she really loved, and the complete understanding.

Two interesting cherubs not named.

THE theme of this photoplay is a favorite one and usually an interesting one when well handled, because it admits of an infinite variety. Done over and over again, like the Eternal Triangle, is rarely done twice alike and it has a charm of naturalness from the outset that establishes it in confidence, a quality that many dramatic situations seriously lack. It is the story of brother and sister separated in childhood, and the little ones are impersonated by two cherubs so delightful that they deserve mention in the cast.

The little boy striges his little sister in a spat and unintentionally, so far as the gravity of the act is concerned, marks her for life. There is a scar left on her forehead where her hair may conceal it, yet, in conjunction with other circumstances, it is bound to prove a means of identification later on. We know that they are to be separated and reunited at the end, but this does not eliminate suspense, for peculiar reasons. The children are taken to an orphan asylum after the mother's death, and the little boy is adopted by a childless couple in good circumstances. The bereaved little sister runs away, and becomes a family drudge in a drunkard's home.

The effect of environment on character, the persistence of certain inherent traits in spite of the influence of environment from a study so fascinating, so replete with dramatic possibilities that it constitutes a source of suspense in itself. How will she stand up against adverse conditions? How will he withstand the perils of money easily acquired? Although these contrasting struggles are rarely worked out with any degree of skill, they are quite naturally expected, and this whets curiosity. It is a peculiar form of tension that holds attention when the end of the story is known almost from the beginning.

"A Daughter of Israel"

Van Dyke Brooke Gives a Fine Jewish Character Portrayal in a Vitagraph Two-Part Special Feature.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IN "A Daughter of Israel," a two-part Vitagraph subject to be released on January 9, Van Dyke Brooke gives an excellent characterization of Israel Levi, a benevolent Jew. It is a sympathetic interpretation, devoid of any exaggeration, and likewise devoid of offense for any one. Mr. Brooke directed the production, which was made from the script of W. A. Tremayne. Mr. Brooke has been very sucessessful with his Jewish portrayals. One of the best of these was in "Countess Veschy's Jewels," a former two-part subject. In this story he takes the role of a dealer in antiques who raises a child who has been left in his care. He treasures the child as his own, gives her to understand that he is her grandfather; she takes in his heart the place of the daughter and granddaughter he has lost. It is only in later years, when the young woman is rejected by a prospective cousin-in-law as being not only an unknown woman but also a Jewess, that Israel reveals the fact that she may be unknown but she is not a Jewess. It turns out in a really dramatic way that the man who had refused to sanction her marriage to a cousin is her own father.

Norma Talmadge plays the dual role of the mother who leaves the child in the care of the old dealer just before she is killed in an accident and also the daughter of fourteen and later. It is a good performance—marked by the display of pathos in the desperately impoverished mother and by vivacity in the musicianly daughter who goes abroad to study as the result of interest in her by the great Russian violinist. Edward Elkas plays well the part of the musical friend of Israel who discovers the talent of the child.

Donald Hall is Count Strominoff, who proves to be the father of Olga. One of the best scenes in the story is that where Strominoff, having refused to permit the marriage of his cousin and ward to Olga, comes to Israel's home to lay emphasis on his refusal and is confronted by not only the denial of the antique dealer but also by the wedding ring given in Israel's care by the mother of Olga. Mr. Hall's work counts big right here.

The story is well staged and photographed. Much pains have been taken in the showing of the antique store and den of the old dealer. The picture is one containing heart interest—good, straight drama.

The Mayor .....Morgan Jones

Baby Helen, their child.....Helen Badgley
Shep .....By Himself

THERE is a story involved, that of a dauntless mayor threatened by the Political Boss if he does not sign a graft franchise. It is told as gravely as if the main issue was that of individual principle in heroic resistance to organized political corruption, such as has been the theme of many a photoplay, but the real story is that of Baby Helen and Shep, and these two present a spectacle of intelligent performance that has a charm lacking in the "acting" of nature human beings. The baby girl does her part with more spontaneity than usual, that is, without obvious prompting, and from all appearances, she is far from being a nervous child. Shep cannot help showing that he is responding to instructions—all dogs do that—they have not learned to pretend to more than a very limited degree. Shep does well, nevertheless, playing his part with most intelligence in the trying scenes.

The mayor refuses to put his signature upon a grant, made by aldermanic crooks, and the political gang menaces him with vengeance. That vengeance takes a form that any politician familiar with the criminal code would hesitate to use. Baby Helen wanders from her natural protectors in chase of a white rabbit, and loses her way. She is in the neighborhood of the Political Leader's house and is found by his maid at a moment when there is conference in session. When the baby is brought in and recognized as the Mayor's child, it is agreed to hold her as hostage until the Mayor, under pressure, is brought to grant the desired franchise. Inasmuch as such a threat would involve the grafters more seriously than merely stealing the people's property, it is hard to swallow.

The Political Leader hears that his own house is on fire when he is visiting the Mayor and both speed to the rescue—that ends their performance.

Scene from "Barrier of Flames" (Thanhouser).

"Shep," meanwhile, like a good motion picture dog, has traced Helen to the Political Leader's house, and, noticing, as others do not, that it is on fire, he speeds to the engine house and convinces the firemen in dog language that their services are needed. He outstrips the engines, reaches the burning house, climbs a ladder to the roof, makes his way to Baby Helen's room, and barks out of the window his instructions for firemen to put up a rescue ladder. They do so, and one gallant fireman carries Baby Helen down in safety. But what of poor Shep? Will he be destroyed in the flames? The firemen spread a net and Shep barks that he understands. He balances on the window-ledge amid intense excitement and leaps to safety. What became of the blackmailing, kidnapping gang of politicians is left to the imagination. They are probably with us yet.

A Two-Reel Edison Comedy by Ellis Parker Butler, Author of "Pigs Is Pigs."

A BRIGHT comedy with a punch, "Lena" is chiefly remarkable for the delightful way in which Miriam Nesbitt and her support utilize all the opportunity afforded them. There are many others in the cast than those named who contribute materially to the presentation, but the honors go to the principals, notably to Miss Nesbitt and Mrs. Bechtel. The versatility of Mrs. Bechtel leads me to think she is best in what she last does, so responsive is she to every role she is accorded. She only needs the right medium to attain stellar flights. Miss Nesbitt has found in "Lena" a role suited to her dual personality. We have come to associate her with the cold, the severe and the tragic, but she seems to be much more her natural self in comedy.

Miss Nesbitt has succeeded to a degree in forgetting her more elegant self in the humble role of a servant. I say "to a degree" because she and the other Edison artistes have such a strong leaning to patrician manners that they get out of plumb at times. The subtle, je-ne-sais-quoi, air of the grand lady will not down when they are depicting characters raw or half-baked. It is not necessary in this particular case for Miss Nesbitt to subordinate herself entirely, for she is a born lady, president of the Society for improving the Condition of Domestic Servants, who has donned a garb of service and entered that of the Miggles family under the name "Lena."

The general situation is not new—it has been admirably done before, but the author injects a new element by having Mrs. Miggles, where the masquerading "Lena" is serving, exhibit all the small consideration shown by society women to their servants and then lecture before the society on how to get along with "help." Mrs. Miggles, as depicted by Mrs. Bechtel, is a weeping willow, she bends to every domestic storm. She is the incarnation of married women who do nothing themselves and are therefore unable to appreciate what effort costs, the most densely selfish of all human beings on earth. If the author had greater knowledge of photoplay requirements he would have devoted more time to this character and less to portions of doubtful value, such as the search for a satisfactory servant in the employment bureaus. It is better to center attention on a handful of main characters than to scatter interest with too large a cast.

The real issue is the inconsistency of Mrs. Miggles, and her type could have stood much larger development. She is readily recognized as it is, being representative of a large class in our social fabric. Her discomfiture on discovering immediately after her lecture that her "Lena" is none other than the Society's honored president is the climax. Mr. Butler looks like a "comer" in spite of some faults of structure in his comedy. The conception is clever and the story itself is in line with what motion picture production sadly lacks. It is to be hoped that he will continue, keeping in mind that this young art is distinct in structure and treatment from the older ones.

Violet Mesereau---Imp Star

VIOLET MERSEREAU, the Imp leading lady, will be seen shortly in a remarkable film, entitled "She Was His Mother," a film as full of pathos and realism as one can imagine. Miss Mersereau plays the part of a winsome little country girl as the story opens and then later as an old gray-haired beggar woman.

Violet Mersereau.

This clever little girl has had an interesting career. She played in "Rebecca of Sunny Brook Farm," both here and abroad on the legitimate stage, and hopes that some day she will play this delightful role for the pictures. An idea of her versatility is given when one considers the diversity of the characters of Peg in "Peg o' the Wilds," and Rebecca, both of which little Violet played so wonderfully well.

This child wonder has been on the stage since she was nine years old (she is just eighteen). She played in the companies of such famous stars as Maxine Elliott and Margaret Illington, and took a splendid part in "The Clansman." Needless to say, this fine training, together with her natural talents, has enabled her to accomplish a great deal toward good picture acting. Her natural charm, sunny disposition and personality have also been assets of no mean value. Violet hopes to become a very famous picture queen and is studying hard and working conscientiously besides being on the alert for new wrinkles in the picture field all the time. It will be interesting to follow the onward march of this dainty little actress toward certain success.

Undoubtedly, her work in "She Was His Mother" will add to her many laurels.

SHEEHAN TOURS THE WEST.

W. R. Sheehan, general manager of the Box Office Attraction Company, made a flying trip to some of the western exchanges of his company from which he has just returned. He was accompanied by Hunter Bennett, general western representative. While in Kansas City they held a conference with N. H. Spitzer, formerly manager of the World Film, but now manager of the Box Office Company there; E. A. Westcott, manager of the Minneapolis office, and H. T. Peebles, manager of the Dallas office.

Chas. Werner and N. F. Robinson, until recently of the World Film ofice, St. Louis, were appointed manager and assistant manager of the Box Office Exchange in that city.

R. S. Shrader, until recently manager of the World Film office, Indianapolis, will handle Indiana and western Michigan for the Box Office. P. B. Elliott was engaged to travel Illinois and Wisconsin for the Chicago office.

T. C. Montgomery is manager of the Chicago Exchange; and, without a doubt, is one of the best versed and most popular managers in the west.

J. M. Kuhn, special representative for the World Film in Minneapolis, has been appointed assistant to E. A. Westcott, manager of the Box Office Exchange in that city.

Mr. Sheehan states that salary is no object in securing high-class managers and road representatives for his company. President Wm. Fox insists on having the highest type of representatives who will do justice to the Productions Extraordinary, which he is now producting.

Two Lubin Subjects

Barry O'Neill Directs Rose Coghlan in "The Sporting Duchess"—"The Valley of Lost Hope" a Thriller.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THERE can be no doubt that this feature was produced with a most lavish expenditure of money. "The Sporting Duchess," one of the famous plays of another generation, requires the proper atmosphere; scenes of rural outdoor life as it is lived in England; autocratic mansions. Beautiful landscapes are indispensable in the filming of such a production as "The Sporting Duchess." Extraordinary efforts to secure this atmosphere for the screen have been made, and with unqualified success.

Philadelphia is surrounded by splendid homes and mansions of a distinct English type of architecture. Selection of the choicest of these was made with painstaking care and with a discerning eye to what was beautiful and charming. There are several scenes showing in most realistic fashion the pleasurable excitement of "riding to hounds," the capture of "Reynard," and the display of the "brush" amid the baying of the hounds and the cheering of the hunters. Every single thing in these scenes is correct, even to the minutest details. It is impossible to resist this continued charm of genuine atmosphere.

Barry O'Neill, who is named as the producer of "The Sporting Duchess," was confronted with the difficult task of putting the play in the proper screen form. The most trying part of these film adaptations of plays taken over from the speaking stage is to hold the interest of the spectator in the early part. Over anxiety to overlook nothing has resulted in a slow and halting movement until well toward the middle of the production. There were never any great film values in "The Sporting Duchess"; certainly not enough to furnish forth good screen material for seven thousand feet. Were it not for the splendor of the settings and the occasional animation in some of the early dramatic scenes, the spectator might find it difficult to sustain his interest. No less than fourteen persons actively connected with the story of the play appeared on the screen. This circumstance alone will explain the difficulties of the director, Mr. O'Neill, who on other occasions has shown such admirable skill in film adaptations. To employ such a big cast, there must naturally be episodic digressions from the main theme, and these are always a dangerous element in a film play, as they tend to distract the spectator's attention.

The fame of Rose Coghlan, who takes the part of the "Sporting Duchess," is written in indelible characters upon the scroll of American artists of the first order. In the days of her prime her refinement of manner, her musical voice, her perfect elocution, her womanly charms, her histrionic skill, her mastery of refined comedy, her lightning-like flashes of humor, won for her admirers without number. In this film adaptation of her old favorite play, she holds the center of the stage but for a fleeting moment toward the end of the play, and there is something like a faint echo of former glories, but the camera makes it evident that she is no longer the slender goddess of former days.

Mr. O'Neill has done his best to utilize the pathos and humor of the story, and there are scenes, especially toward the end of the play, which give some evidence of his skill. Nor is there lacking an occasional display of dramatic power. The climaxes of some of the minor episodes are pleasingly and convincingly strong. That the final climax of the play itself is its best part is well known to all theatregoers and well brought out on the screen.

"The Valley of Lost Hope" (Lubin)

HERE is a play which supplies in most generous measure the thrills and the excitement which are looked for by so many exhibitors and by a large share of the patrons of the moving picture theatre. Nor are the thrills without a reason. There is logic in the excitement and nearly every turn of the story is dramatically justifiable.

One of the prettiest scenes I have ever seen in any moving picture play was the visualization of the birth and growth of a "boom town" upon the discovery of gold. The rush of the settlers, the eagerness to build, the rise of a miniature city in almost a few hours, are portrayed with a skill very far above the average. It is literally true that we see the town grow from the putting down of the first rough lumber to the completion of the saloon and post-office.

Deserving of equal praise as a piece of realism is the head-on collision of two trains. One searches the history of this screen in vain for a parallel of this terrific scene. It is doubly impressive because it comes as the Nemesis of a gang of swindlers who have robbed the poor of their savings.

All through the play the settings are exceptionally fine. They will win admiration everywhere. Less gunplay and safe blowing would have made the picture stronger; these crime-exaggerations have never done any good to any picture that was ever made. The realism of the picture must have been secured at a tremendous expense of money. The play abounds in group and mob scenes. Nothing is more difficult than the artistic handling of crowds on the screen. While here and there the crowds are well handled, there is a good deal of over-drilling which makes the action of the crowds seem unnaturally simultaneous. Because a crowd acts in concert it does not follow that its members act like automatons. The skillful director does not seek to suppress individual characteristics entirely.

The plot is of the wholesome and popular melodramatic variety. A little less exaggeration of the types might have added to the artistic values. Nothing is more insufferable to the average audience than the prolonged strutting and attitudinizing of a self-conscious "star" before the camera. The pugilistic clergyman is not an unattractive type nor necessarily an improbable one. Exaggeration, however, will do harm to such a type more than to others.

Altogether the "Valley of Lost Hope" is a very fair type of good melodrama, and when one remembers the numerous instances of splendid realism and the succession of genuine thrills, it requires no gift of prophecy to forecast its success with a very considerable number of moving picture patron.

SUPERB CAST IN "THE GIRL I LEFT BEHIND ME."

William Fox has exercised excellent judgment in selecting the principal players to appear in a picturized version of "The Girl I Left Behind Me," rehearsals of which are now in progress at the Pathe Studios.

Besides Robert Edeson, there will appear Claire Whitney, Walter Hitchcock, Irene Warfield, Stuart Holmes, Edna Pendleton, Arthur Clifton and Nanon Walsh. Even the "bits" will be portrayed by experienced screen players. In some of the big scenes the services of eight hundred people will be required.

The producing of the photoplay has been entrusted to Lloyd B. Carlton, conceded to be one of the best-known and talented producers in the cinema field.

ACME PRODUCING COMPANY ORGANIZED.

A meeting of stockholders of the Acme Producing Company, of Pleasantville, N. J., was held on December 8, and the following board of directors was elected: J. B. Sharp, Bert Whitman, D. La Compe, Wm. Goff, Chas. L. Lutz, Hugh Collins, Herman Bean, Dr. Jos. North, C. W. Lear, A. P. Risley, S. Adams, C. L. Tarr, T. Crawford, W. N. Fox, C. P. Beitel, all of Pleasantville.

The general manager of the company is Al Jacoby, formerly with Lubin and the Colorado Film Company. William Reed, who has had some experience with the Vitagraph Company, will have charge of the electrical and mechanical department. Plans have been completed for an extensive plant. Frederick H. Johnson will be advertising manager. A meeting of the directors was held on December 15 for the election of officers.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE FLOWER OF FAITH" (Selig).

A decidedly unique and very interesting two-reel picture-play will be released by the Selig Polyscope Company on Monday, Dec. 28. It is entitled "The Flower of Faith," and tells the story of the life of a country girl, named Rose, whose future is directed by the flower of that name.

The first scenes are laid in a country village. The heroine cultivates an extensive rose garden, and her lover, a typical young village swain, is a neighbor, and their souls become entwined. She has a vision which tells her that both joy and sorrow will come to her through roses. She is ambitious and goes to the city, where she has a struggle against poverty, but finally succeeds in obtaining employment as a stenographer. The jealous wife of her employer sees her wearing a rose, which has been presented to her because of her evident fondness for the beautiful blossoms, and causes her to be discharged.

Poverty pursues her and one day the fascinations of a beautiful rose in the store of a florist inclines her to its possession, so that she steals it, is arrested and fined for the theft. A theatrical manager pays her fine and gives her employment in his company as a chorus girl. She is invited out to dinner, rejects the drunken advances of her escorts; there is a fight and her escort is shot. The ensuing publicity deprives her of her position at the theater, and again she consorts with squalid poverty.

One day she decides to end it all and is about to throw herself into the river when a Salvation Army lass saves her. Her name becomes blessed among the poor through her work with the Salvation Army.

In the meantime, her village lover has gone west, discovers a gold mine, sells it and returns to the city, where he buys the finest house there. He has searched for his sweetheart, but cannot find her. He has bought, however, at auction, an oil painting for which Rose posed. This he has enshrined in his library.

In the meantime, Rose, the Salvation Army lass, while passing his magnificent mansion, is attracted to the conservatory by the roses within. She enters to enjoy their fragrance and the gardener, not knowing any one is inside, locks the doors and goes away for the night. Rose tries to escape and wanders through the conservatory into the house, where she is discovered by her lover in the drawing room. They are happily united.

The photographic effects are unusually brilliant, while the scenes are rich in charming effects. Edith Johnson, claimed by the Publicity Department of the Selig Polyscope Company to be the most beautiful girl appearing on the screen, takes the leading part, as "Rose." She is ably supported by other well known Selig players. The scenario is by Will M. Hough, and the production was directed by F. J. Grandon.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE RELEASES.

The Vitagraph Company announces that beginning Jan. 5, and on every Tuesday thereafter, all three-part Broadway Star Features will be released in the regular program of the General Film Company. Other Broadway Star Features of four parts or more will be released through the General Film special feature service.

"IN PORT O' DREAMS" (Lubin).

This is the final number of Emmett Campbell Hall's fascinating serial and the patrons of the photoplay will be delighted to know that the good Lord Cecil and the charming little Betty have at last reached the haven of life-long prosperity and happiness. Betty always had the idea that socially she was far from being Cecil's equal and it gave her much anxiety, but by accident she discovers that she was even more, for she learns that she is the grand-daughter of the Duchess of Drex, who is the autocratic leader of society and a millionaire heiress in her own right. The greatest day in Cecil's life is when on the balcony of the mansion he presents Betty and her baby son, who will be the future Lord of Croftlaigh, to the tenantry of his 10,000 acres. Truly Lord Cecil has been an adventurer and much beloved and the sequel of the story is beautiful proof that virtue will reap reward. Many patrons of photo-motion will be sorry that the tale has ended, but another excellent serial will immediately follow.

"THE GARDEN OF LIES" (All Star).

In the All Star Feature Corporation's production of Justus Miles Forman's intense dramatic production, "The Garden of Lies," in which the versatile dramatic star, Jane Cowl, makes her first appearance, will be the New Year's week release of the Alco Film Corporation.

Miss Cowl, party of players, two directors and Manager Philip Klein of the All Star, journey to St. Augustine for the staging of the exterior scenes. Several magnificent southern mansions were leased for a short period, and so elegantly were these homes furnished that Augustus Thomas, who accompanied the players, decided to stage his interiors there also.

One of the mansions was wired and equipped and two reels of interior scenes made therein. This will mark Miss Cowl's first appearance on the screen and that her beauty and grace will be an adjunct, is a foregone conclusion. Jane Cowl in "The Garden of Lies" will be the regular Alco release Monday, Jan. 4, 1915.

LAKE CHAD ON THE SCREEN.

In constructing the African kraal used in several scenes in "The Last Chapter," Richard Harding Davis' story, being produced by the Favorite Players, great care was taken to secure absolute accuracy down to the minutest detail. Photographs of a native settlement near Ngigmi were secured.

Scene on Lake Chad (Favorite Players).

Ngigmi is situated on Lake Chad and a small stream which empties into that lake almost surrounds the entire village. In fact the village might almost be said to be an island, as the only connection with the land is an impassable tropical morass, egress to the village and exit from it are possible only by over a rough native bridge.

"An island of this kind is readily defensible against native attack," said William D. Taylor, "and we purposely selected one, which showed the characteristics of Central African natives, even though we followed approximately and not exactly the line of march along which Gordon, the African explorer, in 'The Last Chapter,' must have passed."

Carlyle Blackwell spent many nights absorbing local color for the African scenes in this picture. "It is surprising," said he, "how many little things one can pick up when one starts to dig out matters of this kind. As the result of the work that Taylor and I did on "The Last Chapter," I almost feel myself competent to engineer an African exploration party. I now know exactly what equipment would be required for a trip of this kind, and I am even familiar with some of the simpler ways and signs used by the natives on the Guinea Coast."

KLEINE'S "DU BARRY" FEATURES ORIGINAL CAST.

George Kleine's "Du Barry," release of which is soon to be announced, not only features Mrs. Leslie Carter, but others of the original cast, whose names will be remembered in connection with the long and successful history of the stage play. The difficult role of De Cosse Brissac is played by Hamilton Revelle, who was identified with that part for many years. Comte Jean Du Barry is the work of Campbell Gollan, while Louis XV, King of France, is handled by Richard Thornton, both of the original cast.

"THE FATAL NIGHT" (Sawyer).

Sawyer Film Corporation announces that they will soon release another film in which Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude are the co-stars, entitled "The Fatal Night." This is a four-reeler, and is based upon the night of the massacre of St. Bartholomew, when thousands upon thousands of Huguenots were murdered at a given signal. The great historical event is made the background of an unusual and very charming love story, which in turn is filled with dramatic incident and an amazing series of exciting adventures for hero and heroine. Constance Crawley is the Huguenot girl, who is saved from death by a Catholic noble, whom she finally learns to love. The settings are beautiful and unusual, the costuming complete in every detail, and the whole feature produced on a magnificent scale. Five hundred people act in the production.

MOTOR-DRIVEN TICKET SELLER.

The Automatic Ticket Selling & Cash Register Company have been making sales of their new motor-driven machines at a merry clip and announce, through their sales manager, Mr. E. S. Bowman, that their factory is busy day and night turning out orders.

Among recent sales they announce the New Hippodrome, Baltimore, Md.; Janice theater, Flushing, L. I.; New Alhambra, Brooklyn; Fulton Street Auditorium, Brooklyn; Orpheum, Melrose, Greeley Square and 71st Street theaters, New York. They have also closed contracts with a number of base ball clubs for their machines, issuing admission tickets with rain checks attached.

H. C. Simeral, special representative, is at present establishing agencies through jobbers in the Middle West.

NEW 1915 EDITION THEATER RECORD LEDGER NOW READY.

J. V. Bryson, of Minneapolis, publisher of the Theater Record Ledger System, has now ready for the trade the new 1915 edition. The Theater Record Ledger has long been the theater man's necessity, and each year Mr. Bryson adds and improves his system by accepting and listening to suggestions from his customers. Neatly encased in a heavy cover, the Theater Record contains fifty-two double pages of bookkeeping entries. So that each page is for a complete week's business or the whole book one year's records. The pages and columns are so arranged that one can at a glance keep a complete record of every receipt and expense. The different priced tickets are separated as well as the matinee from nights' receipts. Opposite this the entire theater's disbursements can be kept and the columns are so arranged that it is possible to keep every different item of expense separate. In all the Theater Record is the most complete and, as far as we know, the only theater man's bookkeeping record system on the market. The book sells for $2.50 and is advertised elsewhere in this issue.

STRONG SCENE FROM "IN THE SHADOW."

Most folks in the film world know Harry Handworth as director of the Excelsior Feature Film Co., but in the forthcoming picture, "In the Shadow," he displays his ability as a two-handed fist fighter. Handworth enacts the part of the mountain lover of Marie Boyd. William A. Williams also aspires to win the heart of the simple little fisher girl. This condition of affairs is the cause of jealousy, and Williams and Handworth enact one "first-class scrap" on the edge of a precipice. Handworth's greater weight finally tells and Williams falls from the edge of the rocks into the stream below, from which periless position he is finally rescued by the girl, who was the cause of it all.

NEW MANAGER FOR KLEINE'S MINNEAPOLIS OFFICE.

C. M. Thall has been appointed manager of the Kleine Branch Office at Minneapolis. He succeeds Harry Rowe, resigned. Mr. Thall will be remembered as one of the Kleine representatives traveling out of the main office. He counts a host of friends among exhibitors throughout the country, having been actively engaged in the film business for the past three years.

SUPERIOR FILM MANUFACTURING CO.

The Superior Film Manufacturing Company, of Des Moines, Iowa, announces its facilities for developing and printing for the trade on another page in this issue of the Moving Picture World. This company was organized in June, 1913, and incorporated later with a capital of $50,000. It has a commodious studio and factory in the Franklin Building, 13th and Crocker streets, Des Moines. R. E. Norman and C. W. Kramer are the originators and owners of the business. Up to the present the company has made 87,000 feet of negative in the line of civic, industrial, educational and advertising subjects for events in the states of Iowa, Minnesota and Missouri, exclusive of the output of the finishing department and the company's own picture "The Round-Up."

GENTER REPORTS MANY ORDERS.

The J. H. Genter Co., Inc., Newburgh, N. Y., report that during the past week, they have installed screens in the following places:

The Dixie Amusement Co., Nashville, Tenn.; Peter Peterson, Somerset, Pa.; Montgomery & Ebers, Midland, Pa.; W. S. Littlejohn, South St. Joseph, Mo.; Lyric Film & Supply Co., Terre Haute, Ind.; Idle Hour Theatre, Emsley, Ala.; W. C. Beatty, Garden Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Delft Theatre, Marquette, Mich.; Orpheum Theatre, Yonkers, N. Y.; Unique Amusement Supply Co., Marion, Iowa; Vic Perez, New Orleans, La.; Chas. Bryen, New Salem, Pa.; Nathan M. Strope, Claysville, Pa.; Electric Shop, Newark, Ohio; Hoffmeister & Hicks, Memphis, Tenn.; Omaha Film Exchange, Omaha, Neb.; Penn Amusement Co., Uniontown, Pa.; H. Beck, Sec., Y. M. C. A., Indiana, Pa.; Starland Theatre Circuit, Winnipeg, Canada; Mr. H. L. Rockhill, Roanoke, Va.; Hudson Construction Co., New York City (10 screens); Walter Evans, Union Theatre, Dinuba, Cal.; Star Theatre, New Castle, Pa.; Corse Payton Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Cunningham & Zeba, Ludington, Mich.; Geo. Weaver, Auburn, Ind.; Watertown Film Exchange, Watertown, N. Y.; C. J. Hohman, Manchester, N. H.; Lyric Theatre, Comanche, Texas.; Colonial Theatre, Connellsville, Pa.; Sam. Spain, Bensen Mines, N. Y.

In addition to the above the demand for the Master White, their new white glass screen and curtain coating, has so far exceeded expectations. Master White is guaranteed to contain no glue, lime or whiting and is a glass coating. This firm also manufactures Dip Lacquers in any color desired, also metalized glass, paints and bronzes. The J. H. Genter Co., Inc., will gladly at any time send samples of any of their products and a postal addressed to their main office, Newburgh, New York, will result in samples being sent.

ANOTHER MOTION PICTURE COMPANY.

The George W. Lederer Stage Filmotions Corporation is the title of the newest company organized to produce motion pictures. It is a New York corporation and is capitalized for the amount of $500,000. Although this is the first publicity that has been given to Mr. Lederer's company, it has already completed its first picture, "The Fight," adapted from Veiller's play which had so great a success at the Hudson theatre last season. Mr. Lederer prepared the adaptation and Herbert Hall Winslow directed the production. Margaret Wychley, who appeared in the stage production, plays the same part in the picture, supported by John E. Kellerd, Katharine LaSalle, Tim Cronin, Charles Strowbridge, Miss Edna Hibbard and others. The picture will be released about the first of the year. It is Mr. Lederer's purpose to make a feature every month, together with a serial founded upon Lederer's famous Casino theater revues. The offices of the company are at 126 West 46th Street, New York.

MANY STARS IN THIS VITAGRAPH.

Among the productions listed for future release by the Vitagraph Co. is "Lifting the Ban of Coventry," a stirring military drama in five reels by Col. Jasper Ewing Brady of the Vitagraph Co. The play opens at the Military Academy, West Point, goes to Fort Clark, Texas, thence to Fort Hamilton, New York, and ends with a thrilling battle picture in the Philippine Islands. The production is under the capable direction of Wilfred North, assisted by Col. Brady. That "Lifting the Ban of Coventry" will be brilliantly acted is evidenced by the startling cast provided: Lillian Walker, Rose Tapley, Julia Swayne Gordon, Darwin Karr, Harry Northrup, Ned Finley and a score of the other Vitagraph stars.

ALCO TO STUDY BUSINESS CONDITIONS.

Arrangements are being made by the Alco Film Corporation to secure commercial reports from its agents throughout the country. Blank report forms have been prepared and representatives will each week tell the number of bankruptcies, number of mills and shops closed, number of vacant stores and a lot more information calculated to indicate the prosperity or lack of it, in any community. Quite an ambitious undertaking.

KRITERION GETS NASH ANIMAL PICTURES.

A. M. Kennedy wires the home office of the Kriterion Program that he has closed a contract with the Nash Motion Picture Company of Los Angeles, Cal., for its product. Two three reel subjects are ready for release, and are said to be of excellent quality.

INCE INCREASES STAGE CAPACITY.

Additional proof of the ever-increasing demand for the productions of Thomas H. Ince has been furnished by the fact that a large new extension to the already mammoth stage at the New York Motion Picture Corporation studios has just been constructed. The work was decided upon following a realization by Mr. Ince that the room on the stage had been inadequate to accommodate the entire staff of directors at the one time. The stage now measures some 200 feet in length and 75 feet in width. There is ample space for the staging of a dozen different scenes simultaneously, while the entire area can be used to produce one of the biggest single sets possible in motion pictures today.

SCHOOL CHILDREN APPRECIATE "CAESAR."

The unusual spectacle of a street filled with Erasmus Hall students, all besieging the doors of the Clarendon Theater, met the eyes of passers-by on Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn, on Monday afternoon, December 14th. The occasion was the showing of George Kleine's wondrous photo-spectacle "Julius Caesar." Three showings of this great film had to be given during the afternoon in order to satisfy all who were clamoring to view it, and even then standing room was at a premium until after five o'clock. In fact, the Clarendon management had to break through their ordinary rule of a matinee and an evening performance and were compelled to run continuously from 1 p. m. until 11:30 p. m. —a most remarkable day's business being done.

Dr. Gunnison, the principal of Erasmus Hall High School, took a deep personal interest in the event, and saw to it that three relays of 500 students each, with accompanying friends and relatives, attended the performances. The young people evinced the liveliest interest in the photodrama and showed their pleasure by frequent and enthusiastic applause. Several clergymen attended and lent dignity to the occasion. All in all, the progressive Clarendon management may well feel proud of their success, and this particular effort is indeed a feather in the cap of hustling General Manager W. H. Kemble.

R. PLAISSETTY'S ENTERPRISES.

Rene Plaissetty, formerly of Paris, who was producer of the "Filma" brand of films, came to America several weeks ago and became connected with the Coquille Film Company, which has its studios in New Orleans, La. Since making his connection with the Coquille company Mr. Plaissetty has produced his first five-reel detective feature, "The Pearl from India," which he brings to New York within a few days.

Word from New Orleans is to the effect that Mr. Plaissetty will soon arrive in New York with his first American-made production. He may be addressed in care of the Moving Picture World, where anyone may send letters making engagements to see him.

Director Plaissetty is delighted with the climatic conditions of New Orleans and is still more delighted with the wonderful scenery which can be found in Louisiana. He is now working on plans for a larger studio at New Orleans for the same company, and will probably seek an outlet for regular semi-monthly releases of features of the detective kind, and also for single-reel productions weekly, the latter to be comedies.

"MY EXPERIENCES ON THE BELGIAN BATTLEFIELDS."

NEW BUILDINGS AT MUTUAL LOS ANGELES STUDIOS.

A huge building containing one hundred dressing rooms has been erected on the grounds of the Griffith-Mutual studios in Los Angeles, together with another two-story structure for the stage carpenters. The latter building is fully equipped with work benches and all the modern requirements for building and remodeling stage settings.

"A LUCKY DISAPPOINTMENT."

Soon to be released in the Mutual program is a thrilling drama of Western life called "A Lucky Disappointment." It has been written by George Hennessey, and tells how an unwelcome suitor saves father and daughter from a highwayman. "Sheriff" Arthur Mackley both directs and appears in this production, which includes in its cast "Baldy" Belmont, Florence Crawford and Elmer Clifton.

ABELES IN SAVAGE'S "THE MILLION" (Famous Players).

The Famous Players will end the old year by showing Edward Abeles in a film version of Henry W. Savage's successful farce production, "The Million," on the very last day of 1914. This famous melodramatic farce has won the distinction of possessing an abundance of laughter and wholesome fun. The continuous mirth proceeds equally from the action, caricatures and situations of one of the most novel and ingenious plots ever presented on the stage or screen. If the old philosophers are right, and "laughter is wealth," then "The Million" is well named.

"IN KENTUCKY" BEING FILMED.

Under the direction of M. H. Karnes, of Chicago, the famous verses, "In Kentucky," written by Judge James H. Mulligan, of Lexington, Ky., are undergoing picturization.

United States Senator-elect J. C. W. Beckham, Governor James B. McCreary and a number of other distinguished and picturesque citizens and "Colonels" of Kentucky will figure in the film, appropriate scenery will be provided for and line by line each of the thirty-five stanzas will have its sentiment pictorially represented. Gen. Roger D. Williams, of Lexington, has been instrumental in getting the cast, which includes a number of the society women of Louisville and Lexington, to agree to pose before the camera.

The first run of the film will take place in Lexington after which it will be released throughout the country. It is also to be one of the attractions of the Kentucky exhibit at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

FAMOUS PLAYERS SECURES "BELLA DONNA."

The Famous Players' Film Co. will shortly begin an elaborate film production of the world-famed dramatic masterpiece, "Bella Donna," dramatized from the celebrated novel of Robert Hichens by J. B. Fagan, in which Pauline Frederick will be presented in the title role. Miss Frederick and an exceptionally chosen supporting company will be sent to Florida for the exteriors of this noted subject, the atmospheric and geographical conditions of the Southern Atlantic coast being ideally suited for the environment of the play. The film version will be produced under the direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford.

"Bella Donna" brought stellar distinction to Mrs. Pat Campbell in England, and it was also in this play that Madame Alla Nazimova won one of her earliest American triumphs. With the thrilling story itself, the exotic atmosphere of Egypt and the desert, the magic of the mysterious and sinuous Nile, so strangely like the dangerously beautiful and alluring heroine, "Bella Donna" promises much that is valuable in a photoplay, abounding as it does in thrilling mystery and color. Pauline Frederick will play the part of the fascinating Ruby Chepstow, known to her admirers as "Bella Donna." Miss Frederick, who has won a personal triumph in the current success, "Innocent," is under contract with the Famous Players for her exclusive motion picture services.

ALLIANCE EXCHANGES INCREASE.

Last week saw the addition of five new exchanges to the list of Alliance offices, which now total nineteen. These are situated at strategic centers in the United States and Canada and are within easy reaching distance of every exhibitor.

In the West the new offices are located in Spokane, Wash.; Butte, Montana, and in Denver. The South will have two new offices. In Dallas the new exchange will be known as the Alliance Film Co. of Texas, and will be one of the best equipped film houses in the South. This concern will operate under the management of J. W. Hill, Jr., and will handle the Alliance Program in Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas. The other southern exchange will be located in Atlanta, Ga., and will be known as the Hybar Film Corp. The latter concern will have the exclusive rights in Georgia, Alabama, North and South Carolina and Florida.

Arthur S. Hyman, formerly general representative of the World Film Corp. in the South, and P. T. Barber, late advertising manager of the Atlanta Constitution, are the men behind the Hybar organization.

CABANNE PRODUCING "THE BETTER WAY."

W. C. Cabanne is producing for the Mutual program a one-reel heart-interest drama called "The Better Way," in which Dorothy Gish, as a young servant, keeps up a brave struggle to hold her father, an ex-convict, played by F. A. Turner, in the straight and narrow path.

WILL HANDLE KRITERION SERVICE.

Co-operative Service Company, 703 Odd Fellows building, Indianapolis, Ind., who had signed contracts for the Popular Players Program, have completed arrangements with Kriterion Service for the Indianapolis and St. Louis territories. Their offices will be in Indianapolis, St. Louis, Fort Wayne, Louisville and Evansville.

The Greater Tri-State Feature Film Company have closed contracts with the Mica Film Corporation for the Kriterion service. The company is composed of David Keen, Lee Sonneborn, Andrew G. Steen and M. J. Sonneborn. These men are all well known among the trade. They will have offices in Philadelphia, Baltimore and Wilkes-Barre.

LUBIN TESTS "PHOTOLITE."

Visitors to the Lubin Manufacturing Company recently were interested in an unusually brilliant light coming through the glass sides of the big studio. Upon investigation they discovered that the illuminating engineers of the National Lamp Works laboratories were making exhaustive tests with a new incandescent light, known as the Photolite, which has never been used before in the taking of moving pictures. Dr. M. Luckiesh and Mr. H. H. Magdsick of Cleveland, the man who is in charge of the illuminating of the Woolworth Building tower in New York, are in charge of the visiting engineers. The new light was brought to the Lubin Studios in order that the Lubin engineers, under the direction of Mr. Edward L. Simmons, might experiment and pass their opinion upon it. The new light is over half a million candle power and requires the energy of 150-horsepower generator to operate it.

DAVE KLINE JOINS WORLD FILM FORCES.

David Kline, a showman known to almost every theatrical manager in the country, is now connected with the Pittsburgh office of the World Film Corporation in the capacity of road man. Mr. Kline has been in the show business for the past thirteen years and says the "legitimate" has suffered of late years on account of the popularity of the pictures to such an extent that he decided to take up the latter—"where the money is now made." He was advance agent for various Charles E. Blaney shows for eight years, and was connected with Wallace's and Ringling's circuses for several years. He was business manager for William H. Crane, one of Frohman's stars, three years, and acted as advance agent for Vivian Martin in "Father and the Boys;" Vivian Prescott in "Young Buffalo, King of the Wild West;" King Baggott in "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned;" and also the latter-named star when he played juvenile lead in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch."

THREE BIG "BOX OFFICE" PRODUCTIONS.

William Fox, president of The Box Office Attraction Company, has announced three more big "Productions Extraordinary," which is included in his series of fifty releases of big stage hits.

"The Gilded Fool," by Henri Gay Carlton, produced at Miner's Fifth Avenue theater by Nat Goodwin. Mr. Goodwin starred in this play. The story concerns a young fool born with a gold spoon in his mouth who, after receiving many material hard knocks, manages to crowd some sense into his cranium and proves that he is not the fool that they thought him to be.

"The Butterfly on the Wheel," by Francis Neilson and Edward G. Hemmerde, produced by the Shuberts in January, 1912, at the 39th Street theater with Madge Titheradge and Louis Waller. This is a story of scandal in English society where the wife becomes involved in a scandalous divorce action. The big speech by the heroine stirred Broadway.

"The World and His Wife," by Hose Echegarays, the Spanish dramatist who wrote all the great plays for the Royal theater at Madrid. This play was translated by Frederick Nirelinger, produced by William Faversham and used by him as a starring vehicle for both himself and his wife, Julia Opp. This play deals with gossip and its evil effects.

ROLFE MAKES DEAL WITH FISKE.

B. A. Rolfe, head of the producing company which bears his name, left for Hollywood, Cal., this week where plans for the occupation of a studio, now being equipped, will take up most of his attention. Before leaving, however, Mr. Rolfe announced that he had formed an alliance with the prominent producing manager, Harrison Grey Fiske, and that he had secured the principal dramatic success of this manager and that arrangements were going forward, looking to the presentation of Mrs. Fiske, undoubtedly one of the most dignified and famous of dramatic stars, in one of her former successes.

Mr. Rolfe's arrangement with Mr. Fiske, the ramifications and obligations of the contract and the ultimate indulging in actual production work by the artistic producer himself, makes the Rolfe-Fiske connection one to be anticipated by the entire industry.

The presentation of the Fiske plays will be made through the Alco Film Corporation with which Mr. Rolfe's concern is allied.

UNIQUE PUBLICITY SCHEME WITH KLEINE'S "CAESAR."

Manager Winstock of the National Amusement Company, Portland, Oregon, one of the livest exhibitors in the west, has booked George Kleine's big film spectacle, "Julius Caesar." Mr. Winstock has obtained a great deal of publicity through the Portland papers by offering a complete set of Shakespeare's works to the school boy or girl writing the best essay on "Caesar" from the film portrayal. The only conditions connected with the contest are that the writers shall be pupils of Portland schools; that essays shall not exceed five hundred words and shall be delivered at the box office of the National before midnight on Saturday following the exhibition date, and that contestants attend the afternoon performances.

Mr. Winstock is thus enabled to get what is equivalent to a special matinee and considerable helpful publicity on the total outlay of the cost of a single set of books.

DETROIT.

JOHN H. KUNSKY, INC., is the name under which the chain of theaters formerly controlled by the Casino Amusement Company, is now being operated. The executive offices continue to be in the Dime Bank building. The film exchange business controlled by Mr. Kunsky is still operated under the name of the Casino Feature Film Company.

The Empress theater, on Woodward avenue, managed by J. M. Wood, is now running a straight feature policy. The admission price is ten cents; in fact, ten cents has been charged for the past eight months. Mr. Wood runs the Paramount features after they play the Washington and Liberty theaters; he gets the first run, however, of the Alliance program.

Starting Monday, December 7, the Alhambra and Garden theaters, have adopted the straight feature policy, running features every night in the week. Preceding the regular feature at the Garden, a short educational film is shown.

At the invitation of M. Geiger, Detroit representative of the Eclectic Film Company, many exhibitors met at the New Empire theater, Wednesday evening, December 9, following the last show and saw the first exhibition in this city of the beautiful Pathe natural color production "Life of Our Savior." The exhibitors were strongly impressed with the picture, judging from the many favorable comments heard while it was being shown. On Thursday, Mr. Geiger received no less than a dozen phone calls from exhibitors asking what dates were open. Mr. Geiger makes his headquarters at the Hotel Berghoff, where he will always be glad to meet exhibitors. He has already made a number of bookings on the new serial "Exploits of Elaine," which will be released December 28.

At the Broadway theater, Wednesday, December 9, the Renfax musical motion pictures were exhibited for the benefit of exhibitors.

The first free exhibition of moving pictures for school children took place at the Washington theater, Saturday morning, December 12, the use of which was donated by John H. Kunsky. The pictures were donated by A. J. Gillingham, of the General Film Company. The Mayor of the city, Hon. Oscar B. Marx, spoke on "Safety First." Each week there will be different pictures shown, and some prominent person will address the children. Mrs. E. C. Watson, president of the league conducting the exhibitions, said: "We wish to illustrate the teaching of history, geography and literature of the schools, and while the first efforts may fall far short of our ideal, we hope the plan will eventually work out. In the meantime the public will be educated to the thought. We hope to seat about 1,500 children each Saturday, and 11,000 before we are though. The pictures will continue for some weeks." For the first week a film entitled "The Result of Carelessness" was shown, followed by a "Trip Through Spain." Also a picture on woodcarving.

Twenty Michigan counties have been showing prize apples and fruits at 180 Jefferson avenue. Added interest was given to the exhibit by 4,000 feet of moving pictures showing splendid views of Michigan orchards and farms. The exhibit was under the management of the Western Michigan Development Company.

The Detroit News has joined the Chicago Tribune and the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation in offering ten thousand dollars for a photoplay serial story. All those who care to contribute should send manuscripts to the Scenario Dept., Detroit News, Detroit, Mich., before midnight, Jan. 17.

Large crowds attended the special showing of war pictures at the Broadway theater, the week of December 6. The pictures were taken by a staff photographer of the Chicago Tribune with special permission of the Belgian government. The Broadway theater management donated a certain percentage of the receipts to the local Red Cross Society in addition to the 50 per cent. covered by contract with the Belgian government. A. J. Gillingham, of the General Film Company, was responsible for the Detroit showing of these pictures. During the week, the Belgian consul was the guest of the house management.

Through the efforts of the Chapter B, Michigan P. E. O. Society, nearly 500 children were entertained December 9 at the Washington theater to see "The Rose of the Rancho." The organization sold many hundreds of tickets for the matinees at the Washington Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, the proceeds of which were devoted to the East Side Settlement. Many people bought tickets and turned them right back to the society, and these were used to entertain the orphan children.

Moving pictures do not affect the morals of youth, according to the three judges who decided a debate held in the Utley branch library Tuesday evening, December 8, by members of the Detroit Women Writers' Club. The subject of the debate was "Resolved, That the Moving Picture Shows Do More Harm Than Good." Both sides presented many arguments. Among the judges was Lester Potter, former censor of pictures for the police department, and now a member of the detective staff. After the debate, members of the club asked Mr. Potter many questions pertaining to the industry. One important one was that of "flickering." Someone said that pictures hurt the eyes. Mr. Potter explained that people going to picture shows should use the same judgment as they would in reading a newspaper; in other words, if they are near-sighted they hold a newspaper close, and so should sit closer to the front at a theater, and the same thing to those who are far-sighted. Mr. Potter told of the great good pictures were doing, even though occasionally a bad film would creep in.

The Detroit Exhibitors' League have appointed a committee to call on the film exchanges and endeavor to bring about some understanding of showing only such pictures as are passed by the National Board of Censorship. This committee consists of H. F. Fowser, Thomas Lynch and J. C. Ritter. "The exhibitors feel that any film that is passed by the National Board of Censorship is fit to be shown anywhere," said Mr. Ritter. "As it is now the exhibitors are handling some film considered objectionable. There is no particular type that they object to, only a film here and there. If the exchanges will handle only films that are passed by the National Board we think it will result in betterment of the motion picture industry."

H. P. Decker, representing the Box Office Attraction Co., was in Detroit the week of December 7.

At the office of John H. Kunsky, Inc., there is a special room for managers where they can get together and talk things over among themselves. In this room there is a bulletin board for notices, etc. Hardly a week goes by that Mr. Kunsky does not paste up some article of interest taken from the Moving Picture World. Although Mr. Kunsky is an exceedingly busy man with his nine theaters and his film exchange, he always finds time each week to look through the World and take particular notice of items that are especially interesting. Mr. Kunsky goes further than this. He personally subscribes for nine copies of the Moving Picture World, so that each manager gets a copy every week. He says that the reason he does this is because he does not know of a better way to keep his men posted on what is going on in the industry. He not only gives his managers a copy every week gratis, but wants them to read it through carefully, because the more they know about the business, the more valuable they become to themselves, and hence, the person who employs them.

C. M. Davis, Detroit representative for the Alco, went to New York on December 8. He was gone for three days on business.

One of the greatest Keystone comedies ever seen in Detroit was presented at the New Empire on Sunday, December 6, entitled "His Pre-Historic Past." Those who saw it are still telling their friends to "be sure and see it when you get a chance."

Lathan Bros. will open a moving picture theater at 235 Michigan avenue. Alterations are now being made to the building, and it is expected to have the house ready to open by holiday time.

F. P. D'Arcy, owner of the New theater, in Kalamazoo, Mich., was a recent visitor in Detroit and signed with the Detroit Universal Film Company for the regular program. Mr. D'Arcy was on his way home from Dayton, Ohio, where he saw the first run of "Opened Shutters," a new Universal release.

Lymah H. Howe was at the Garrick theater Sunday evening, December 6. Some of the most marvelous examples of the moving picture are included in the semi-scientific films, showing animal life under the sea, bird life, chemical changes in metals and minerals and the growth of flowers. The travel pictures were remarkable.

The Detroit branch of International Association of Theatrical Stage Employes are asking for an increase in wages. The Detroit Theater Managers held a meeting December 8, but would not accede to their demands, which they said were unreasonable.

The Gladwin Park theater, under the management of Mr. Mellon, has changed its policy owing to the large number of people who have been turned away nightly. Instead of starting the shows at 7.30 and 9 P. M., the first performance will start at 6.45 and will run until 11 P. M., which will mean that three shows can be given nightly instead of only two as in the past. The change became effective Monday, December 7. Matinees have been discontinued, except on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays.

The new Jewish theater at 448 Gratiot avenue is managed by Frank Papp; the operator is James Williamson. The admission price is five cents. The house seats 540 people. The equipment in the operating room consists of two Powers 6A machines, motor driven. The picture throw is 45 feet, but the theater itself is a very deep one.

W. G. Kaliska is the new manager at the Royal and Casino theaters, owned by John H. Kunsky, Inc., succeeding Mr. Irons, who went to the Liberty and lately to the Washington. Mr. Kaliska formerly managed the Allendale theater in Buffalo for a year, and previous to that time was manager of the Strand in that city. He has been connected with the legitimate stage, film exchanges, and every department of theatricals.

The Vinewood theater has been sold by Barry & Dietz to Mrs. Fannie Rodger. The theater is in a two-story brick building on a lot 40 by 100 feet on the south side of Michigan avenue, near Vinewood avenue. It is valued at $5,000.

Hereafter all pictures shown at the Pallister theater will be censored by a joint committee of the Drama League and the Collegiate Alumnae, arrangements having been made with Mrs. Julia H. Finster, proprietress of the Pallister.

The Arbor theater, at Woodward and Harper avenues, owned by Alvan D. Hirsch, was opened for the first time Saturday evening, December 12. The house seats 400. Inside and out the theater has the arbor effect. Mr. Hirsch plans to have two nights of features and the balance of mixed programs. The house is 40 by 75 feet in size. Mr. Hirsch owns the large lot in the rear, and later on, if business warrants, he plans to erect a much larger auditorium, using the present theater as a lobby. A Powers machine is in the operating room; a Masterlite screen is used for showing the pictures.

SMITH.

NEW ENGLAND.

NEW ENGLAND wishes a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to all members of the trade throughout the country.

The Orpheum theater, North Cambridge, Mass., is under new management, Samuel Moscow having disposed of his interest to F. H. Wotton, who operates a circuit of theaters. G. F. McNamee, of Philadelphia, is the new manager of the house. Mr. Moscow, while operating the theater in his own interests, was also affiliated with the Eastern Theaters Company. He now intends to devote his entire time to this latter concern.

Samuel Goldstein of the Broadway theater, Springfield, Mass.; Edward Knight, of the Bijou theater, Springfield, and Neil Kelliher, of the Opera house, Waterville, Maine, paid a visit to Ed Farrell, manager of the New England office of the General Film Company, last week.

A unique form of advertising is to be tested by E. S. Brown, proprietor of a large department store in Fall River, Mass., during the Christmas shopping season. He has contracted for the old Edison feature "The Night Before Christmas." A screen will be placed on a building opposite his establishment and the film will be run off for shoppers.

Rock and Hayes plan to open their New Marlboro theater on December 22. The house has a seating capacity of 1,050. The proprietors have contracted for Mutual service. The opening attraction will be the Majestic and Reliance film "Home Sweet Home," which was produced under the direction of D. W. Griffiths.

Harry Campbell, former New England manager of Warner Features, Inc., and more recently connected with the Eastern Theaters Company, has assumed charge of the New England office of the Box Office Attraction Company. Mr. Campbell is one of the best known film men in New England and was one of the first to enter the exchage field. His thorough knowledge of the game combined with his admirable qualities will prove a valuable acquisition to the William Fox forces. He succeeds Louis S. Levine, who established the local office last March. Mr. Campbell intends to interview every exhibitor in the district with the assistance of four road men.

Joseph Mack, one of the most popular theatrical men of Boston, who was manager of the Hub theater for a number of years, is now associated with the Eclectic Feature Film Exchange.

Another big feature attraction has been doing a good business in Tremont Temple in Raymond L. Ditmar's extraordinary pictures of animal life.

Nearly 2,000 school children gathered in Tremont Temple last Saturday to see the first exhibition of motion pictures ever given in Boston exclusively for their benefit. These film entertainments are arranged under the auspices of the Women's Educational and Industrial Union, children's players department. The first reel was a pictorial presentation of Longfellow's poem, "The Children's Hour." The pillow fight was immensely enjoyed by the children. This was followed by a humorous reel, depicting the adventures of a police dog, wherein the final downfall of a wrongdoer gave tremendous satisfaction. Between the reels, Parker B. Feld, of the Children's Mission, explained the pictures.

Building Commissioner O'Hearn prohibited the exhibition of the Belgian War pictures, which have been playing at the Boston theater, at the Boston Press Club, last Sunday afternoon. He said that the building was not provided with sufficient fire exits.

P. A. Shea has sold the Park theater, Woonsocket, R. I., to J. J. Donahue.

The Mount Washington theater at Haverhill, Mass., will be opened about the first of the year by Messrs. Hazen and Metcalf.

Henry Shanley of the Adams theater, Attleboro, is planning to open another house in that city.

P. A. Powers, president of the Universal Film Service and Warner's Features, was a visitor to the Hub during the week.

B. H. Bodge of the Elite theater, Norwood, and H. S. Davis of the Opera House, Cavendish, Vermont, have booked several new features through Winfield H. Bradley, manager of the New England office of the Mutual Film Corporation.

N. D. Morrill, formerly connected with the Box Office Attraction Company, is now in charge of the Portland, Maine, office of the Mutual Film Corporation, succeeding H. W. Hatch, who has been transferred to the Buffalo office.

The New England Universal Film Exchange is planning to build and own their exchange. Manager J. A. Eslow is negotiating for the purchase of 4,000 square feet of land at the corner of Massachusetts avenue and Newbury street, Back Bay.

The Emery theater has opened at Providence, R. I., featuring the Thanhouser serial "Zudora." M. R. Toohey is manager of the house. It has a seating capacity of 2,000 and its lobby is one of the most expensive in the country.

H. Hirsch, New England distributor for the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation, visited the Thanhouser studios at Rochelle, N. Y., last Sunday, looking over the future releases of "Zudora." While there, he had a conference with Author Daniel C. Goodman, Publicity Director Joseph Cairns and Directing Producer Fred Sullivan.

Thomas D. Sorerio of the Gaiety theater, Providence, R. I., reports that the World Film Corporation's production "The Man of the Hour" went big with his audiences last week.

In an endeavor to get young folks to attend church the Rev. D. H. Hickey, pastor of the Barnham Memorial Church, South Boston, plans to give moving picture exhibitions in connection with the services at his church. In discussing the matter, Mr. Hickey said: "My problem is to get boys and girls off the street corners at night. I am going to solve it in a way that young people like. The young and old like pictures. When a man gets home from his work he wants some entertainment. What is more entertaining than moving pictures of the right kind? My church will have these exhibitions regularly."

Harry Campbell, proprietor of the Princess theater, Marlboro, has thoroughly renovated his house. He has installed a new floor, a pipe organ and 800 new seats.

Paul W. Panzer of the Eclectic Feature Film Company is appearing at the Somerville theater, Somerville, Mass., and the Scenic Temple, Cambridge, during the week. He describes how the various scenes of the "Perils of Pauline" were made.

Stephen Bogrett, proprietor of the Bijou theater, Bangor, Maine, has contracted to use the features of the World Film Corporation. He started last week with "The Marked Woman" featuring Barbara Tennant.

J. H. Huff has opened the Lincoln theater at Worcester, Mass. He is using World Film features.

Samuel Pinanski, manager of the Modern theater, Boston, is corraling a list of names of the patrons of his theater that, when completed, will keep several girls busy from one end of the week to another. He proposes to have heart to heart chats with his audiences by means of the weekly publication, to be known as the "Modern Times." Future attractions, brief biographies of the leading stars, their peculiarities and opinions of the public will be published.

At the opening of the Franklin Park theater at Blue avenue and Columbia road, Dorchester, it was necessary to seek the aid of the police reserves to handle the large crowd that was unable to secure admission to the house. A half an hour before the beginning of the show the house was packed to the doors. The main feature was the Paramount picture "Behind the Scenes," with Mary Pickford.

The World Film Corporation's latest release, "Your Girl and Mine," which is to be presented with the co-operation of various suffragette organizations throughout the country, ought to go big in New England. At the present time the question of "Votes for Women" is at its height in this section. McCLOSKEY.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

BUSINESS in Baltimore, Md., is rather dull, according to William Fait, Jr., who is connected with a string of moving picture houses in that city. "I do not know what the trouble is, but I was in fifteen houses today during the rush period and it is safe to say that you could have put the combined audiences into any one house. Neither the ten-cent nor the nickel houses are doing anything. The vaudeville houses seem to be doing some business, but nothing in comparison with what they should do, and this same thing applies to the legitimate houses.

"In all probability," he continued, "the present slump is due to the fact that so many people are out of work. Out of fifty thousand of a certain class, employees of clothing, hat, cap and other factories, fully thirty-five thousand are out of work, and we have something in Baltimore today, and I do not remember of ever having seen this before—they are maintaining stations at which sandwiches and coffee are being given away. Of course, there have been a few weeks in which we have made money, by that I mean weeks in which we have made a net profit of more than the depreciation of a house and the incidentals that cannot be figured upon, amounts to, but these weeks have been very few. I am, perhaps, a little bit pessimistic. My father believes that after the first of January things will begin to boom; in fact, he is just the reverse, quite optimistic, and that all of these people will again have work and little by little conditions will right themselves. I cannot take quite the same view, but, like all of the rest of the exhibitors who feel this depression, I can say 'here's hopin it's so.'"

Mr. Fait may appear somewhat pessimistic, but strange to say there are many others who tell much the same story. There are few exhibitors who come to the National capital who can truthfully say there's much doing anywhere.

The members of Local No. 224, of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Protective Union, are extremely busy these days preparing for their annual ball, which is to be given on February 8, next. The fifth annual ball of Local No. 181, of Baltimore, Md., will be held at Hazazar's Hall, at 111 West Franklin street, on January 25.

W. S. Simeral, of the Simeral Amusement Company, Clarksburg, W. Va., stopped over in Washington last week on his way to Florida, where it is said he will investigate the possibilities of an orange plantation.

S. B. Hutchins, of the Olympic Theater, Portsmouth, Va., visited the feature film exchanges.

Upon the recommendations made by Assessor W. P. Richards and Building Inspector Morris Hacker, motion picture and other theaters may hereafter be established on approval of the majority of the property owners and tenants on the two sides of the street in the block where a location is sought, the two sides to be considered together and not separately, as has previously been the case. In a recent issue, where an applicant desired to open a moving picture theater in the northwest section of the city, he secured the necessary signatures from the people on the one side of the street where there were numerous houses, but failed to secure a majority of those residents on the opposite side, of which there were three. It was therefore deemed that the regulation would be fairer if it demanded only a majority of signatures from residents and property owners on both sides of the street combined, be obtained, and the commissioners of the District of Columbia have accordingly adopted the change.

While in Washington last week, J. D. Hofheimer, who operates the Strand, Arcade, Palace and Manhattan moving picture theaters in Norfolk, Va., contracted for a number of feature films. For the Arcade he booked twenty-four to be delivered at the rate of three a week; one a week for the Strand, "The Perils of Pauline" and "The Exploits of Elaine," which is soon to be released, for the Arcade and Palace. All of this business went to the Eclectic Feature Film Company.

Jack Levy, manager of the Greater New York Film Rental Company, of New York; A. Carlos, representative of the Box Office Attractions Company, and C. L. Worthington, manager of the Philadelphia office of the latter concern, were visitors at the new quarters of the Greater New York Film Rental Co. and of the Box Office Attractions Co., at 305-307 Ninth street, Northwest.

Clifton Cross and W. F. Crall, representing the Norfolk Moving Picture Company, both of Norfolk, Va., were visitors here during the week.

Leon and May have opened the Dixie Theater in Manassas, Va.

M. L. Hofheimer has opened his New Theater in Richmond, Va. This is a very attractive house, with a seating capacity of 375. It is built on a rather unique plan in that the rear of the house is the front; upon entering the theater, the patron finds himself just back of the last rows of seats. It is claimed that this arrangement of seats forms many advantages. The house is well graded and the lighting is furnished by a number of the so-called direct-indirect lamps. The Powers 6-A machines have been installed. Mr. Hofheimer has also just opened the National moving picture theater in Lynchburg, Va.

David Warner, who has been managing the Baltimore office for Warner's Features, Inc., has been transferred to New York and his place taken by W. H. O'Brien, formerly at the Wilkes-Barre, Pa., branch of the Mutual Film Company.

The Strand Theater, in Richmond, Va., has been closed.

It is quite pleasing to note that all but two of the houses in Richmond, Va., are now charging an admission of ten cents after six o'clock in the evening and the exhibitors are reporting that they are meeting with much better results.

The Lyric Theater, in Petersburg, Va., is reported closed.

Charles A. Somma has taken over the Dixie from H. C. Eberhardt, in Richmond.

The box office receipts fell off considerably last week, on account of continued rainy weather. Happening just as the exhibitors were becoming more optimistic, the setback is again bringing forth complaints of hard times. The Belasco Theater, however, is resorting to the six-reel Universal Feature, "Damon and Pythias," with two exhibitions daily and prices at ten, fifteen and twenty-five cents, and the Columbia will show through the present week the photoplay "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." The play at the Belasco is booked for two weeks.

Mrs. Mary M. E. Stenz has filed an answer to the suit brought by the Hippodrome Amusement Company to enjoin her from attempting to eject them from the theater at 808 K street, Northwest, and from raising their rent at that place. The Hippodrome Amusement Company held a five-year lease on the property, at an annual rental of $1,500, which lease contained a clause by which they could obtain an extension of two years upon its expiration on December 1, 1914, "at a reasonable increase in the rent." An effort was made to secure the extension under such condition, but it is claimed that Mrs. Stenz demanded $200 per month, which the company claims is unjust, unreasonable and prohibitory, and have asked that the District Supreme Court decide what a reasonable increase in the rent would be. Mrs. Stenz in her answer says the new rent she wants is not at all unreasonable. CLARENCE L. LINZ.

MICHIGAN.

MANAGERS of moving picture theaters in Houghton county were urged to add one cent to the price of every ticket sold between Dec. 15 and 24 and to turn over the extra receipts to the Houghton County Anti-Tuberculosis Society.

The Family theater at North Branch is giving away a set of Japanese china every Monday night.

The Star Theater Company of Calumet has opened a moving picture show in the Grand hall at Mohawk and will give exhibitions Sunday, Monday, Wednesday and Saturday evenings.

Work of remodeling the building at 901 Monroe avenue in Grand Rapids for the new Original Vaudette theater for Gilligham & Smith has begun. The house will seat 350. It is planned to open it on New Year's Eve.

The Gem and Electric Theater Company of Manistee has been incorporated with a capital stock of $3,500.

N. C. Nelson of Greenville has opened two moving picture shows at Greensboro, S. C.

Manager Paul J. Schlossman furnished "Judith of Bethulia" to the Muskegon Woman's Club to follow the reading of a paper on "The Moving Picture," by Mrs. William A. Campbell of Muskegon.

A design has been selected from the suggestions offered for the houses under the management of the Delft Theater Company. Miss Margaret Conkling of Marquette designed a Dutch boy, one hand in the pocket of his capacious blue trousers, the other at his blue cap, wearing a shirt of light tan, with touches of red to enliven the costume. This figure will be executed in colored stucco and placed in a niche in the various theaters. It is planned to open the new Delft theater in Munising on New Year's Eve.

The new Princess theater, which has been opened at Cadillac by the Mertzes and which will be managed by Harry Mertz, will be a five-cent house except on Wednesdays, Saturdays and Holidays, when special bills will be given at ten cents. Alfred Schoenhoals of Cadillac will be in charge of the projection.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

INDIANA.

MAURICE LATIMER, Cannelton, Ind., after a short visit at home, has started on another roving trip with his moving picture outfit. He has a set of films of an educational nature which he exhibits at school houses. He travels in a covered vehicle built especially for the purpose. His moving picture machine is operated from storage batteries and the pictures he shows are as up-to-date as those shown in any of the regular moving picture theaters.

Manager Stover of the Orpheum theater, Plymouth, Ind., has been making some improvements. A partition and storm doors have been placed in the east side of the lobby. The change will add considerably to the comfort of the house. A new furnace also has been installed.

Cleo Miller, of Brownsburg, is running a picture show two nights a week in Hayworth Hall, Pittsboro. Miller had some trouble getting a license and making other arrangements for his show, but finally got things straightened out and is now running every Wednesday and Saturday.

The Col-Day theater, Jasonville, has added a steel-lined booth as an improvement to the house.

L. J. Dunning, Plymouth, Ind., has bought a picture theater at Noblesville, Ind., and left Plymouth to take possession. There are only two theaters in Noblesville and both are ten-cent houses. Dunning's Plymouth friends do not know which house he bought.

The Orpheum and Crescent moving picture houses at Terre Haute have agreed to display pictures to help the Red Cross Christmas sale until Christmas Eve. The Crescent theater also has agreed to run the Red Cross picture play on the causes of tuberculosis on Saturdays.

The New Era theater, Columbus, Ind., has been bought by L. C. Moses, of Lima, Ohio, from the former owner, Harry Rosenbush of Columbus. Mr. Moses says that he will run the house on a slightly different basis and expects to make it strictly a 5-cent house. Mr. Moses was connected with the Standard Oil Company at Lima, and this is his first venture in the moving picture business.

Councilman Miller of Indianapolis has introduced a new license ordinance that makes the moving picture show pay a graduated fee according to the number of performances and the size of the house. In some instances the increase amounts to $124 a year. In others the sum is reduced $1. For shows operating from 7 P. M. until midnight only and charging no more than 5 cents the rate is $25, being $1 less than the present rate. For shows operating before 7 P. M. and charging no more than 5 cents the fee is $100 a year, an advance of $74. For shows operating before 7 P. M. and charging more than 5 cents the fee is $150. The larger houses are making a strong protest against the increase on the ground that the Federal tax and local tax make the license fees that Councilman Miller proposes prohibitive.

A large number of moving picture exhibitors from Illinois, Ohio, Kentucky and Indiana, as well as most of the managers of the local photo play houses, accepted the hospitality of the Co-Operative Service Company, Indianapolis, which gave an exhibition of the Kriterian program, which it will control for the Central States. The Starland theater was used for the event and, aside from several film comedies and dramas being shown, a lunch was served. Elmer Brient, for several months associated with local exchanges, is manager of the new concern.

The Palace theater, Richmond, is redeeming fifteen bread labels for the Richmond Baking Company for one admission.

The Cincinnati Motion Picture Company, of Cincinnati, has made a contract with the business interest of Madison, Ind., to make a booster film for the city. The film is to be shown in about 90 theaters in Indiana and Kentucky, and will then be returned to the Commercial Club and held as their property.

Manager Hayes of the Dreamland theater, Mt. Vernon, Ind., has been asked to put on a special program for children on certain nights of the week. He has indicated his willingness to comply as near as possible. The request comes as a result of agitation stirred up by the editor of the Mt. Vernon Unafraid, who summoned attention to what he called pictures that were of bad influence because they showed gambling, drinking, immorality and crime.

The Temple theater, Hartford City, has been sold by Thomas Ellis to Ben Cloud & Son of Peru, Ind. The house has been operating several months as a picture theater, but the new management expects to use vaudeville and legitimate attractions.

Alonzo Cook, owner of the Opera house picture show, Greencastle, has agreed to turn over his entire receipts for one night for the local Christmas fund.

The editor of the LaGrange Call is one of the few to commend the moving picture and to notice that the moving theaters are not trying to feed the public on wild west and crime pictures any more.

The Nickelo at Waldron, Ind., has closed. Waldron people don't seem to care for moving pictures.

The Victoria theater, Indianapolis, is flashing on the screen a notice to the effect that the management would like to know of anyone in the audience the names of their favorite actors. The people who have favorites leave their names and addresses at the box office and the management makes it a point to notify them by mail when films in which these actors appear are on the program. It is a service that the fans appreciate.

"Damon and Pythias," the six-reel feature of the Universal Film Co., was shown in the Murat theater, Indianapolis, for four days, a share of the proceeds going to the local winter relief fund. The local lodges of the Knights of Pythias attended in a body on several nights.

The New York Central lines "Safety First" film story, "Steve Hill's Awakening," was shown in Indianapolis, under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce. The attraction, which was accompanied by a lecture by Marcus A. Dow, was liberally attended.

C. E. Rogers' plan to give a Sunday afternoon concert and picture show for charity in Crump's theater, Columbus, Ind., was knocked out by the Ministerial Association, which objected to the show on the grounds that it was an opening for other Sunday violations. R. L. JENNE.

MISSOURI.

WHAT is probably a record for one picture has been established by the Christian in Kansas City at the Willis Wood theatre. This subject was run two weeks and during that time it is estimated that over 50,000 people saw the picture. Every night during the first week the house was packed to standing room, and during the second week it was about the same. On Thanksgiving Day there were 6,676 paid admissions. The picture undoubtedly made the greatest hit of any picture that was ever brought to the city, and all the papers throughout Kansas have commented on it.

J. B. Price, manager of the Star theatre at Hannibal, Mo., turned his entire house over to the charity associations of that city Friday afternoon, December 4. Three shows were given that afternoon and the association received a very handsome sum of money. His program was "The Old Flute Player" and a comedy.

James V. Chilton has sold his theatre in conception to parties in that city whose names have not been announced. Mr. Chilton has returned to his home in Stanberry, Mo.

The Missouri University has a complete set of slides dealing with the conditions that led up to the war in Europe. The slides are loaned to picture theatres that care to use them in conjunction with their regular program. Professors from the university will lecture on the slides if their expenses are paid.

Nine hundred and sixteen school children attended the industrialogs that were shown at the Sedalia theatre in Sedalia, Mo. These pictures dealt with the present problems of the United States as a result of the great struggle in Europe.

C. S. Edwards, who was recently appointed special representative for the Eclectic Film Company, had been confined to his home for over a week on account of illness. He is better now, however, and is able to return to work. He expects to leave for Denver in a short time.

Manager Merritt of the Palace theater announces that another new Powers 6a has been installed. This makes the second new machine that has been installed recently. Mr. Merritt says that since all the buildings that were being constructed around him have been finished business has shown a marked improvement.

The Willis Wood theatre will show "The Spoilers," a big Selig picture, for ten days following a four day engagement of the San Carlo Opera Company. "The Spoilers" is being advertised very extensively. The Lappe-Tighe Amusement Company has had 10,000 heralds printed after its own ideas instead of using stock heralds. Besides this the company has lobby displays in all the hotels and in many of the drug and music stores. This system of advertising has been used considerably by the house. The management of the theatre announces that it also expects to use two full pages of advertising in one of Kansas City's leading newspapers.

The Springfield Daily News every Sunday morning runs a full page of "movie" news; that is, it runs pictures and short notes about the various stars in the picture world, besides the weeks offerings at the various theatres. Most of the matter printed is simply gossip, but it proves that the general public is becoming interested in the personality of the players as well as the pictures themselves.

The merchants of Pleasant Hill are becoming interested in the plan that the Harrisonville, Mo., merchants have adopted to bring customers to town; namely to show free moving pictures. The merchants of Harrisonville give two shows each Saturday, one in the afternoon for the country people who have to return to their home before dark, and one in the evening for the town folks.

H. Taylor, manager of the Queen and the Diamond theatres in Kansas City, reports an excellent business. Mr. Taylor has adopted several interesting advertising "stunts." On Thanksgiving he gave away five turkeys to people holding lucky numbers. On Monday nights he gives away what he calls pay envelopes. Each envelope contains at least one cent and from that up to $5. He says that on Monday night his receipts are nearly doubled. He also intimates that the added receipts are considerably more than is put into the envelopes. BROWN.

CINCINNATI.

THE new Universal serial, "The Master Key," has made its appearance in Cincinnati with much impressiveness, the publicity accompanying it, handled through the Cincinnati Enquirer, being of the first order. A large amount of space has been used, exclusive of that given over to the relation of the story in printed form, and accompanied by a list of the theatres showing the serial, with the dates on which it appears at each of them, has proved to be extremely effective in producing business. The film is being handled in this territory by the Cincinnati Buckeye Film Company.

The new Strand theatre made a clever bid for "high-brow" approval last week, and, apparently, won it, when the management extended an invitation on Saturday to the principals of the public schools, who are rather numerous, to attend the film performance of "Julius Caesar" being presented there the latter half of the week. The school men attended and fully enjoyed the picture, and expressed to the management their high appreciation of its courtesy.

"Your Girl and Mine," the suffragist film, which was produced under the auspices of some of the most prominent feminist leaders in the country, and in which many of them, including Dr. Anna Shaw and others, appear as actors, is to be released in this section shortly by the World Feature Film Corporation's local office, and Manager Brehm expresses himself as confident that it will not only be a pronounced hit purely as a drama, but that it will operate as a sure-enough argument in favor of equal suffrage. Another recent release was the World's "Prince of Peace," which was sent out last week. The local office announces that hereafter there will be a weekly one-reel comedy released, with a big feature semi-monthly.

The Orpheum had one of the biggest Sundays last week of the entire series of big Sundays which has been noticeable at that large house, the secret of the unusual crowds being the fact that there was a bargain offering of an unusual nature. Two five-reel features were shown, "Lena Rivers," and the Famous Players' production of "The Scales of Justice," making ten reels for ten cents. The lobby was jammed for every show during the entire afternoon and evening.

The new Hippodrome theater, which will be the largest photoplay house on the south side of the river around Cincinnati, is getting along nicely, and indications are that the Newport house will be completed within a comparatively short time. Several additional contracts were let recently for the work of finishing up the structure, and if the weather permits the work to be pushed as rapidly as is desired the management will yet be able to get in on a considerable part of the winter season.

The Edward-Zeitler Feature Film Company, a well-known concern in the film business, has made arrangements to open a permanent office in Cincinnati, adding another to the already numerous exchanges and branches doing business here. The quarters of the company are to be in the Savoy building on Sixth street.

The Forest theater, a new house in Avondale, Cincinnati, at Reading Road and Forest avenue, started off with a good device to let people know of its existence, a popularity contest, in which patrons were given an opportunity to vote for the prettiest girl in Avondale, running through its first week. Arrangements were made for the exhibition of moving pictures of the winner, lending an unusual touch to a business-getting plan not in itself out of the ordinary.

The Valentine, the newest and one of the largest motion-picture houses in Canton, O., opened recently with marked success, the initial offering, "The Mystery of Edwin Drood," founded on Dickens' unfinished novel, meeting with the approval of large audiences. The house is up to date in every respect, and is unusually attractive. It is so constructed as to the stage mechanism, dressing-rooms and so forth that it can be used for vaudeville later on, but at the present time the management has indicated its intention of showing only moving pictures, the Shubert-Brady productions being scheduled for a leading part, as the Valentine has the exclusive rights to these productions in Canton.

It is reported from Wapakoneta, O., that A.

P. Gibbs, a well-known owner of motion-picture houses, of which he has a considerable string, is planning to open a new house in that town, as he was there recently looking over the field with a view to selecting a site or an appropriate building. On the fairly tenable ground, as Mr. Gibbs put it, "that the show business is like a crowded car, always room for one more," he feels that there is room in Wapakoneta for another house, and will probably make definite arrangements for its construction in a short time. His headquarters are in St. Louis.

CASEY.

KENTUCKY.

BAD weather in Louisville since the first of December has had a tendency to lower attendance at the moving picture houses, especially at the outskirt theaters. Such houses as have been running serials have noted that patrons were so much interested that they turned out in very bad weather and serial nights have been busy ones. Social activities have been waning this fall and the downtown moving picture houses and theaters have done very well indeed.

Fred Sheldon, president and general manager of the S. & P. Film & Supply Company, Louisville, reports a very satisfactory business. The war tax which went into effect on the first of the month has wrought less havoc in the business than was expected. Mr. Sheldon stated that he lost one theater in West Virginia and one at Morton's Gap, Ky., though in both cases the houses were small and would probably have closed for the bad winter months anyway.

Frank Hammer, who was formerly connected with the Mutual Film Corporation's Louisville office, is now traveling out of Chicago for the Peerless Film Company of Louisville. During the first week in December he paid a visit to his old friends and acquaintances in Louisville.

The Louisville office of the Warner Feature Flm Corporation has been wound up and reopened in Evansville, Ind. The Indianapolis office will handle the Falls City district as it did before the local office was opened. J. J. Hebert, former manager and road man for the Louisville office, will now travel out of the Evansville office.

George Owens, who operates the only moving picture theater in Mt. Vernon, Ky., was recently in Louisville making arrangements for new film service for the Kentucky Boone Way theater.

Edward Bingham, of the Empress Film Company, of Indianapolis, Ind., was recently in the city calling on Judge Allen Kinney and several of the other downtown exhibitors.

Johnson Mussellman, formerly connected with the S. & P. Film & Supply Company, of Louisville, and with Louis Dittmar's Arcadia, is now with the Princess Amusement Company.

The first showing of the big Universal feature "The Master Key," was made at the Star theater, starting Sunday and Monday, December 13 and 14. The Central Film Service Company recently ran a large advertisement of the serial in the Louisville Evening Post, of Saturday, December 5, and A. C. Farrell, local manager of the company, has been very successful in his other bookings around the city and out in the state. From the way the film started locally it looks as if good crowds will be in attendance throughout the whole fifteen weeks the serial is to be shown.

J. J. Murdock, executive manager of the B. F. Keith circuit, of which the Mary Anderson theater is a member, was recently in Louisville for a few days and while here arranged for a new scale of prices at the big photoplay house. Hereafter, day and night admissions to the lower floor will be ten cents and seats throughout the rest of the house in the afternoon, with the exception of Saturday and Sunday, will be five cents. The admission fee for children at all times has been set at five cents. Mr. Murdock stated that the character of the productions would in no way be lowered. By reason of the fact that the company has installed motion pictures in a number of theaters throughout the country and also because of the Mary Anderson's big capacity, 1,500, it will be possible to present the largest and best productions at the new schedule of prices. Mr. Murdock was present at one of the Saturday morning performances given for school children. He declared that the Louisville women behind the movement deserved a good deal of praise for their efforts, which have already attained national prominence.

The local branch of the National Red Cross Anti-Tuberculosis Association recently made arrangements whereby the Edison production "The Temple of Moloch" was shown at the Orpheum theater, on Jefferson street near Fourth, Louisville. Arrangements have been made whereby the film will be shown again about December 15, at which time the "Christmas Seal" sales start. This film will be shown in most of the theaters of the state it is said.

The Arista theater, at Lebanon, Ky., owned and operated by Rowland Clark, was destroyed by fire about midnight on December 4. The entire equipment, including instruments, piano, chairs, etc., was destroyed. The loss was about $2,000 which was partly covered by insurance. An adjoining building was also badly damaged. The fire is supposed to have started from a defective flue.

L. H. Stiles, a jeweler of Russellville, Ky., recently held a "dog day show" and by an arrangement with the Dixie theater, of Russellville every one entering a dog in the show was presented with a ticket to the theater. Prizes were offered for the largest, smallest, prettiest and ugliest dogs. The advertisement called for 500 dogs, and a good portion of the 500 were presented. Owners of the four winners were presented with gold watches.

G. D. CRAIN, JR.

SAN FRANCISCO.

H. S. LEVIN, who recently disposed of the Elite theater on Sacramento street, has purchased the New theater on Polk street, near Bush, and will conduct this house along the same lines as the one formerly owned by him.

W. J. Morgan has returned to this city from a trip made recently to Seattle to settle business affairs, and has since left for Los Angeles in company with O. V. Traggardh, of the Union Film & Supply Company, to assume charge of the Los Angeles branch of that concern. The Union Film & Supply Company is preparing to open branches at an early date at Seattle and Portland, and possibly at Salt Lake City.

The Red Mill Cafe, located on Pacific street, has added moving pictures to its program of entertainment.

Louis Hyman, for some time in the booking department of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., is now with the All Star Feature Distributors.

Frank L. Hudson, of the Pacific Coast division of the Eclectic Film Company, will visit the Salt Lake City branch shortly and will make a tour of inspection over his entire territory.

M. E. Cory, of the Sunset Motion Picture Company, left recently for New York with a copy of the film made during the past summer in the Far North. Mr. Cory will also attend to League matters while away, being president of the San Francisco Local and an officer of the National organization.

That an occasional Western picture of unusual quality and beauty is still acceptable to theater goers here, even those who frequent playhouses of the highest grade, was shown forcibly this week when Grauman's Imperial theater was packed at almost every performance to see "The Bargain."

W. L. Blodgett, formerly a well known exhibitor of Oregon, has purchased the New Bell theater in the Mission district from the Arman Company, of which H. A. Yuzuk is president and manager.

The Pennsylvania Railroad has shipped two huge pasenger cars to this city to be used as a moving picture theater in its exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. The cars are to be placed side by side, with the partitions between them torn out, making a unique theater.

Moving pictures were taken of the wreck of the steamer Hanalei, which went ashore recently just north of San Francisco Bay and these were later shown to large audiences at the Portola theater. The wreck was a disastrous one and resulted in the loss of a score of lives.

Mr. Hutchinson, of the American Film Manufacturing Company, paid a visit to San Francisco recently, making his headquarters at the local office of the Pacific Mutual Flm Corporation.

J. L. Warner and wife have returned from an eight weeks' honeymoon trip to the leading Eastern cities, and Mr. Warner is again meeting exhibitors. He promises a number of surprises for the trade in the near future.

G. A. Metcalfe has received samples of the new Optigraph, and this machine is arousing much interest among church people, owing to its simplicity and compactness.

Moe A. Isaacs, of the Box Office Attractions Company, was a recent visitor here, and in company with the local representative Wm. Citron, attended the first annual ball of the Screen Club of San Francisco. Mr. Isaacs has since left for a visit to Los Angeles, accompanied by Mr. Citron.

Stamm & Beede have installed a new Powers No. 6A Cameragraph in their theater at Antioch, Cal.

Willis Thompson has purchased a Powers No. 6A Cameragraph for the handsome new house to be opened shortly at Visalia, Cal.

The Princess theater at Sacramento, Cal., is now under the management of M. J. Silvia and a number of improvements have been made in the house of late, including the installation of two new Powers No. 6A Cameragraphs in the operating room.

J. M. Hampton has disposed of Independence Hall, Fair Oak, Cal., to Fairmon and Baldwin and plans are being made to remodel the building and open it as a modern moving picture theater.

Motion pictures were taken recently in the rice fields of Northern California by the Southern Pacific Company, and these will be shown at the company's exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco.

Charles E. Bailey is making a number of improvements at the Wonderland theater, Turlock, Cal. A motor-generator set and a new Powers No. 6A Cameragraph were recently installed in the operating room.

The handsome Markee theater, recently opened at Palo Alto, Cal., by H. C. Schmidt, is doing a splendid business. The wonderful spectacle, "Cabiria," was recently presented at 15 cents and 20 cents, and Peninsula society was out in full force, the capacity of the house having been taxed at each show.

The Home theater on 13th avenue, Oakland, Cal., has changed hands and is now being conducted by Farlow and Rollins. A new Powers No. 6A Cameragraph has been installed since the change was made.

C. L. Mehrten, who conducts the Varsity theater at Berkeley, Cal., is building a splendid new house at Mill Valley, Cal., a beautiful suburb of San Francisco, located in Marin County, at the foot of Mt. Tamalpias. The building will be of attractive design, of frame and cement construction, and will cover a corner lot one hundred and thirty feet by one hundred and fifty feet in area. The house will seat about 700, and will be equipped with high grade heating and ventilating and lighting systems. The general plan will be much the same as that of the house in Berkeley now being conducted by Mr. Mehrten. Construction work has already been commenced and it is anticipated that the theater will be ready for occupancy within sixty or ninety days. When completed it will be conducted by A. C. Pabst, who now conducts the Hub theater directly across the street from the new house. The present theater is entirely too small to accommodate those who wish to attend moving picture shows, especially in the summer time, when many from San Francisco take up their residence there.

The Photo theater, Lincoln, Cal., recently ran the last installment of the "Lucille Love" series before a record breaking audience. The "Trey o' Hearts" is now the serial attraction there.

The Airdome theater, Woodland, Cal., opened this year by H. R. Laugenour, is being moved a short distance so as to be out of the fire limits, and a roof is being put on. The building is to be twelve feet narrower than the old structure, but will be thirty feet longer, and will have a seating capacity of 700.

An addition is being made to the Castle theater, Newcastle, Cal., in anticipation of a heavy season's business.

G. H. Umbsen of San Francisco has purchased the Murray & Jones property at W and J streets, Modesto, Cal., and plans are being made for the erection of a moving picture theater.

H. H. Campbell has succeeded E. Benjamin as manager of the Victory theater, San Jose, Cal.

S. T. Owings, manager of the Bell Photo theater, Sanger, Cal., has taken over the management of the Sanger Opera House of that city.

The John L. Sullivan Feature Film Corporation has been incorporated at Los Angeles with a capital stock of $50,000 by D. P. Sullivan, H. Revere, L. M. Sullivan, P. J. Clark and E. S. Cummings.

F. Stamm of Antioch, Cal. ,has leased the theater in the new building erected at West Main street and Broadway, Turlock, Cal. by A. Toprahanian of Fresno. The new moving picture house will be opened about the middle of December under the personal management of Henry Kregs of Antioch, who will take up his residence at Turlock.

The first Christian Church, Fresno, Cal., is showing moving pictures in conjunction with the regular services. A new church is being erected at Tuolomne and N streets and arrangements are being made to install a complete projection equipment in this building. Dr. H. O. Breeden is the pastor.

The Strand theater, a beautiful new photoplay house with a seating capacity of 900, has been opened at Pasadena, Cal., under the management of J. M. Root, the opening attraction being Ethel Barrymore in "The Nightingale."

CHURCH.

KANSAS.

THE formal opening of the new moving picture theatre for negroes at Hutchinson, Kan. was held November 26.

Practically all of the theatres in Topeka, Kan. have raised their price from five to ten cents, and those that formerly showed for ten cents are showing for fifteen and twenty.

"War is Hell" proved to be a great drawing card for the Elite theatre at Great Bend, Kan. This theatre is showing many high class subjects for five and ten cents and doing well.

The University of Kansas has started a film exchange which it will operate free of charge for the benefit of the school children throughout the state of Kansas. The exchange handles only industrial films and these are out all of the time. Each film is shown at least twice a week.

Mr. Lowe, state fire inspector, visited Altamont, Kan., and gave some instructions to the local theatre man in the way of fire protection. However he admitted that he found very little to criticise, and what criticisms he did make were a matter of form. He did, however, find considerable to find fault with around several of the mercantile establishments of the city.

OF all human achievements, surely the motion picture most unerringly expresses that idea of service to our fellow men which is the spirit of Christmas. Without regard to creed or sect, to all mankind it carries a single message of life and love and laughter. Therefore, at this season of rejoicing, let us especially give thanks that we, producers and exhibitors alike, are enabled to play such a part in promoting the happiness of those whom we serve. For we are something more than tradesmen; beyond consideration of value received, we daily give, by the very nature of our work, new cheer to our fellow men. And to do that is to fulfill, in the highest degree, the spirit of Christmas.

PITTSBURGH.

N addition to the list of Pittsburgh Film exchanges will be made when the Sawyer Film Mart opens here. Temporary headquarters have been secured on the first floor of the Alco building at 212 Fourth avenue. The identity of the manager of this branch is not yet divulged.

The matter of revenue stamps to be attached to express package receipts caused much confusion Monday, December 1, owing to the inability of the film men to obtain a supply. In this city these stamps must be secured at the Internal Revenue office, but in other towns they can be had at the local express office where shipments are made. Exhibitors returning films by express are obliged to attach a one-cent stamp to every express receipt.

William T. McCartney, of the Majestic theater, at Punxsutawney, Pa., was in Pittsburgh recently and closed up with the Continental Feature Film Company for "Zudora" and Keystone specials.

The Picture Playhouse Film Company has opened a branch in Pittsburgh at 422 Penn avenue, over the Continental Feature Film Company and is already doing business. A well-known New York film man, W. A. Muir, is the manager of the branch and he quite elated over the prospects.

Photoplays founded on Dickens' "Christmas Carol" and the battle of the minutemen at Concord Bridge in 1775 shared with comedy films in the big motion picture entertainment recently given at a "Neighborhood Vaudeville" in the auditorium of the Public Washhouse and Bath association, Thirty-fifth and Butler streets. All enjoyed the lecture by Mrs. M. E. Fickes. The pictures were shown by C. E. Shaler. Meetings are held each Friday evening during the winter.

Harvey B. Day, of the Box Office Attraction Company, Pittsburgh, has received a series of postcards for distribution among exhibitors of this territory. The views include an excellent portrait of William Fox, president of the company, portrait of Miss Claire Whitney and Miss Jackie Saunders, on separate cards; also two cards showing the private exhibition rooms of the company, one showing the "Little Green Theater," also the "Little Red Exhibition Room."

Harry F. Grelle, of the Grelle Feature Film Company of Pittsburgh, left last week on an extended booking tour of the state. He will probably be absent two or three weeks.

Representative of the Noted Players Feature Company of Pittsburgh, T. Harry Oliver, left last week on an extended trip through the east.

J. N. Palmer is now in charge of films at the Film Exchange, 212 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh.

Al. W. Cole, of the Liberty Film Renting Company, Pittsburgh, was in charge of the pictures shown at the hall of Battery B. N. G. P., at their armory in Alder street, last week. The films showed various phases of military life.

E. Carlton, who has houses in Butler and Du Bois, Pa., is getting into the Pittsburgh field, having purchased the Imperial theater, Beaver avenue, Northside. He anticipates purchasing a full set of the hand-painted life-size pictures of all the leading Word Film stars. He said that he anticipated no difficulty in showing the World Film releases at 25 cents.

The Colonial theater, Erie, played to 7,200 persons in two days, December 2 and 3, the pictures being Laura Sawyer in "One of Millions," a world Film Corporation production.

W. H. Shaw and A. P. Brinkmeier, prominent exhibitors of Wheeling, W. Va., the latter being proprietor of the Castle theater, purchased the Southern theater at commissioners' sale for $18,500. The theater is one of the finest of the kind in the entire city and was erected by a company of which George Dieringer was the head, at a cost of approximately $30,000. It was first operated as a vaudeville house and after the contractors and others closed in on the theater for the collection of bills, it was placed in the hands of a receiver and operated as a motion picture house.

The Board of Governors of the Pittsburgh Screen Club are trying to find suitable quarters for the club, and will likely call a meeting of the entire membership in a few weeks to adopt final plans of action.

Logue & Vaughn, of the Penn Poster Mounting Company, recently assumed charge of the Seemore Theater, 1415 Irwin avenue, Northside, Pittsburgh. The owner of this house, David Chatkin, proposes to erect a larger house, seating 500, in this locality.

An application for a Pennsylvania State charter of incorporation has been made for the Pittsburgh Screen Club. The purpose of the organization is to "elevate the industry of motion pictures and the discussion of business among the members." The board of governors named are Hunt B. Miller, Harvey B. Day, Sidney E. Abel, Adolph Klein and Peter Antonoplos.

The Coliseum Theater in Mt. Oliver near Pittsburgh, owned by Fred J. Herrington, has been opened for business the past few Sundays withwill include several feature films which will teach the lesson of Christmas, and will continue out molestation on the part of borough or county officials. No set price of admission is charged, but a silver offering is taken at the door.

The Empire Theater at Third avenue and Eighth street, New Brighton, has changed hands. This is regarded as one of the finest picture theaters in western Pennsylvania, and was erected by C. M. McDonel and Frank D. Hart. Mr. Hart, who is register and recorder, has sold his interest in the theater to Mr. McDonel, who will now be sole owner and will have active management of the popular show house.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association has moved from 113 Fourth avenue, to Room 201 Apollo building, 238 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh.

The Gem Theater, 6280 Frankstown avenue, Pittsburgh, was recently purchased by David Mintz.

The Auditorium, Johnstown, Pa., has been transformed into a skating rink for the winter. Pictures will be resumed next spring.

A building permit was issued last week to C. J. Keller, for a one-story brick moving picture house in Lincoln avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., to cost $8,000.

J. F. Young, a well-known Pittsburgh film man, has joined the road forces of the Box Office Attraction Company, Pittsburgh. He was formerly connected with the Eastern Booking Office.

The Columbia Theater, Turtle Creek, near Pittsburgh, has recently been remodeled and enlarged.

The Avenue Theater, Bellevue, near Pittsburgh, has recently been remodeled and enlarged.

Leo Gerechter's new Anchor Theater, in Diamond street, Pittsburgh, was recently opened. This house has a seating capacity of 275 and has an exceptionally attractive front. The equipment was furnished by the Feature Film & Calcium Light Company, of Pittsburgh.

M. A. Mullen, of the Mullen Theater in Vandergrift, Pa., was in Pittsburgh last week, and stated that he has decided to close his house four days a week for an indefinite period.

David Kline is now connected with the Pittsburgh office of the World Film Corporation in the capacity of road man. Mr. Kline has been in the show business for the past thirteen years. He was advance agent for various Charles E. Blaney shows for eight eyars and was connected with Wallace's and Ringlings' circuses for several years. He was business manager for William H. Crane, one of Frohman's stars, and also acted as advance agent for many other prominent legitimate stars and for several well-known photoplayers.

The Star Theater at Kane, Pa., has recently been enlarged and improved in appearance.

The new Penn Theater, Uniontown, Pa., which is now being erected by the Penn Amusement Company, and which will be managed by C. M. McCloskey, proprietor of the Imp Theater in the same city, is said to be one of the biggest propositions in the State in the moving picture field.

The Ideal, one of the leading motion picture theaters in Altoona, Pa., has been sold by Edward O. Young to C. O. Koller, of this city, owner of the Majestic Theater in Hollidaysburg, Pa., and several other houses.

"Movie" night was held at the Pittsburgh Athletic Association last Saturday evening, for members, families and friends. A special program was provided and features of interest to both young and old were shown.

The postmaster of State College, Pa., R. N. Foster, has nearly completed the erection of a fine new building, the first floor of which will be used as a theater of 400 capacity.

George Zeppas, who owns a moving picture theater in Butler, Pa., is now breaking ground for a 70x125-foot moving picture house in Wheeling, W. Va. He expects to open it by February.

The "Goose-stepping" drills of the German army always appear ludicrous in a motion picture and during the few minutes these films were thrown on the screen in the Burton Holmes travelogue in Carnegie Music Hall, Pittsburgh, Pa., last week, it furnished comedy for the audience. Mr. Holmes described a journey from Berlin to the Austrian Tyrol and interjected many scenes of timely significance in view of the European war.

Motion pictures giving intimate glimpses of the German royal family were especially interesting, as are pictures of Berlin in normal times, depicting with silent emphasis the doctrine of thoroughness and efficiency characteristic of every feature of life in the modern German empire. Military pictures naturally had a large place in the program, but at the same time the lecturer went off the beaten paths of travel, far from the sound of battle, showing the tranquil beauty of the scenery and the peaceful life in rural communities.

A program of music and motion pictures and a lecture on "Toilers in the Dark," showing the work being done in the Pittsburgh Workshop for the Blind, was given in Crafton High School auditorium last week by the Women's Club of Crafton. Walter W. Stamm, executive secretary of the Pennsylvania Association for the Blind, was the lecturer.

MANLEY.

PHILADELPHIA.

COMMENCING Saturday, December 12, the Y. M. C. A. motion picture entertainments exhibiting these pictures on the remaining Saturdays of the month. The program for the twelfth included "A Christmas Accident," "His Honor the Mayor," "The Amateur Lion Tamer" and "America and the European War."

Lewis M. Swaab, the motion picture supply man of 1327 Vine street, comes to the foreground with a new and handy coating to revive old screens known as screencoat. This new material can be applied with an ordinary brush and will not peel or crack and also requires no sizing.

Matthew Walsh, 6129 Lansdowne avenue, pleaded guilty before Judge Davis, in Quarter Sessions Court, to the charge of stealing five reels of moving picture films from the Mutual Film Company, 902 Filbert street, and was sentenced to two years and six months in the County Prison. A representative of the company said that Walsh had leased the films for one night, but instead of returning them, sold them to another house in West Philadelphia.

A new picture theater has been opened on Kensington avenue, below Lehigh. The theater is without name and the management has resorted to the practice of having their patrons choose what the title shall be. The new theater is equipped with an artistic water fountain, and a nurse is present at all times to attend to woman patrons.

H. L. Campbell has opened what might be called one of the most modern and best-equipped moving picture theaters around the coal regions, at Hazeltown, Pa. It has been equipped with two Simplex machines.

The Calehuff Supply Company, of 1301 Race street, has obtained the sole agency for the National Recording Machine which, it is said, will eliminate the need of a cashier and a ticket chopper, at a saving of from $300 to $400 per year.

I. W. Parker has opened a modern and up-to-date motion picture house in Tuckerton, N. J. It is of the latest build and equipment.

The Lincoln Theater, of which Henry Silk is proprietor, has been opened for business at Fifth and Christian streets, with a seating capacity of 500 and of the latest modern design. "The Million-Dollar Mystery" and "The Trey o' Hearts" were the opening films.

I. Goodstein has opened the Belgrade Theater, at Franklin avenue and Norris street. The new house has been equipped with two No. 6A machines.

Moving pictures can now be shown outdoors in the day-time, due to the efforts of F. E. Klump and A. L. Greenfield, of Newark, N. J. The apparatus can be used in moving picture parks and in schoolrooms or auditoriums during any hour of the day or night. A clear-cut, well-defined picture is projected on the screen. Besides eliminating the necessity of a darkened room, the invention shows a steadier picture than the present machines are capable of projecting. At an exhibition in Bigelow Park, Newark, last week, in broad daylight, pictures were visible 75 feet. The machine is known as the "Diascope." The idea used by the inventors is to create a dark space on both sides of the screen. This is accomplished by funnel-shaped walls extending 14 feet forward from the canvas and by throwing the pictures forward from the rear instead of the front. The machine is located 14 feet in back of the screen. As in the front, this rear space is shaped like a funnel, widening from a small space at the machine to the size of the screen.

Mr. Beihoff ,manager, and Mr. Lane, chief salesman, of the World Film Corporation Company, have been transferred to Cleveland and Robert Etris, formerly a branch manager, and Allen May, former chief salesman for the Eclectic Company, have been appointed manager and salesman, respectively, for the World Film Corporation. Mr. C. Melvin is still retained as assistant manager of the company.

"THE PRODUCT"—(Dec. 28).—Strong, owner of a large distillery, marries, and immediately after their honeymoon, his wife, Irene, begins to note the effects which his constant—and as he claims—necessary use of liquor, has caused. Some time later, Slattery, an habitual drunkard, wanders into Strong's yard, and, seeing Irene, lurches towards her. She is almost paralyzed with fright when he confronts her. He grabs her and she screams. Strong, in his automobile, hears her and rushes to the rescue. He knocks Slattery down and is about to have him arrested, when a bottle falls from the fellow's pocket. Irene sees the label of her husband's distillery on it, and the realization that Slattery is one of the "products" of Strong's business, fills her with horror. She intercedes for him, and the policeman is dismissed. Twelve years later, Slattery has become a trusted servant of the Strong family and a close friend of little Helen, Irene's little daughter. Strong himself, has become a victim of his own product—drink. At one time Slattery is obliged to interfere to save Helen and her mother from his brutality. Then Irene begs her husband to give up the distillery. When he refuses, she determines upon desperate measures for the salvation of her husband. She gains admittance to the factory, seizes a bottle and starts drinking. Strong is informed of this and, horrified, he rushes to his office, snatches the bottle away from her and carries her outside. In the struggle, furniture is knocked into the fireplace, set afire, and soon the building is a roaring furnace. Instead of calling the firemen, Strong lets the building burn down, and, with the ruin of his distillery, Strong finds a new happiness with his wife and child, on a beautifully situated farm, with Slattery as its foreman.

"THE PLOT"—(Special—Two Parts—Dec. 29)—While interviewing Kasso, newly appointed ambassador to the United States, Roy Burton, a reporter, meets Vera, Kasso's daughter, and the two fall in love at first sight. A band of assistants Paul and Michael—the latter a butler in Kasso's household—are plotting the death of the ambassador. Roy gets on their track by a Russian conspirators, headed by Alexis and his peculiar accident and promises Vera to do all in his power to run down the conspirators. He follows Paul to their hiding place, but is in turn followed by Michael, is knocked senseless and dragged into their lair. Alexis prevents him from being killed at once, saying he has a better plan by which he can make use of Roy. He succeeds in making a hypnotic subject of Roy, perfects a concussion bomb and plans to have the hypnotized Roy hurl it at Kasso. Vera recognizes Paul in a street car, follows him to the den, but as she is looking through the door, he springs out and overpowers her. He drags her inside and is left in charge of her while Alexis and Michael take Roy to Kasso's house. Paul endeavors to make advances to Vera, but she manages to fell him with a bottle, then finding the door locked, blows it open with one of the conspirator's bombs, and with two policemen, dashes to her father's house. Alexis, using his hypnotic power, forces Roy to walk up to Kasso, holding the deadly bomb behind him. Just as he raises it to hurl it at their feet, Vera rushes up and seizes his arm, while the rascally conspirators are made prisoners. Alexis boasts that no one can break the hypnotic spell he has cast over Roy, but Vera's love proves stronger, and Roy is freed from its sway.

"FORCING DAD'S CONSENT"—(Dec. 30).—Constance and Billy are sweethearts. Mr. and Mrs Boggs, her parents, are both prim, strait-laced people, who are heathen in foreign lands. Pa Boggs has little use for young men of the present generation and when Billy awkwardly drops a race-track badge on the floor, Boggs rises up in his wrath and orders the "perfidious gambler" from his house forever. The old hypocrite later sees a newspaper item reading, "Liveliest cabaret in town at the Rose Garden," puts on his high hat and, after telling his wife he must attend a meeting of the Foreign Missions Society, sallies forth to the Rose Garden whistling "I Love the Ladies." Billy, with some of his friends, enter the Rose Garden, and that young man almost faints on seeing Boggs flirting outrageously with one of the dancers. Billy tells his friends of a startling plan, they induce one of the performers to help, and Billy dresses up in some women's clothes. With a wig and plenty of rouge on his lips, he trips lightly out among the audience. So well disguised is he that when the charming Billy throws a kiss at Boggs, he almost falls off his chair applauding "her." Billy then comes and sits by Boggs. The old rascal begs "her" for a kiss, and Billy asks him for his gold cigar-cutter. After some hesitation, the swap is made, Billy kissing the old man on his bald head, leaving an imprint of the rouge there. Next morning Boggs wakes with an awful headache. His wife, seeing the rouge, thinks he has been hurt, and calls the doctor, Boggs having previously told her a story of highway robbers to explain the peculiar condition in which he came home. Billy calls to "return the cigarcutter" and Boggs is almost speechless on learning it was Billy whom he flirted with. Dad is easily forced to consent to Billy's marriage to Constance, and humbly gives them his blessing.

"LOVE WILL OUT"—(Dec. 31).—Believing in "Art for Art's Sake," Gerald, a young sculptor, is thoroughly disheartened by the return of his statue, "Inspiration," from the Academy, marked, "unavailable." He is in love with Nell, his neighbor, who believes in "Art for Bread's Sake," specializes in commercial art, and is successful. She loves Gerald, but despairs of his ever telling her because of his pride and ill success in his beloved ideals. Despondent, Gerald wanders into the poorer section of the city where he is accosted by a couple of thugs. On learning of his condition, they try to convince him that living "straight" doesn't pay and partially succeed. He promises to join them in their nefarious transactions, and goes back to his studio for something. While there, he seems to see his statue of "Inspiration" come to life, speak to him warningly and point out to him the ambitions and dreams of his youth. The vision fades, and now brought to a realization of the serious mistake he was about to make, Gerald tells the crooks he has changed his mind that he intends to keep on the right path, so they must go on without him. They leave angrily, and the artist returns to his work with renewed enthusiasm. Hearing a well-known connoisseur praising the statue of "Inspiration," Nell almost drags him to Gerald's studio, tells the gentleman that he may purchase the work from the young man inside, then darts into her own room. The two men come to terms—very satisfactory ones for both—and the connoisseur leaves. Gerald then calls on Nell, tells her of his good luck, but is unable to summon courage to propose until he sees her absently tearing corners from a card reading, "Do it now!" Then Nell becomes his "inspiration" for life.

"AUNTIE'S PORTRAIT (Jan. 1).—Mr. and Mrs. Honeypet are expectantly awaiting a promised present from their Aunt Flora, who is very wealthy and traveling abroad. It arrives in a huge packing case, and the Honeypets, trembling with anticipatory delight, burrow through huge layers of cotton and straw. Henry brings forth an atrocious chromo portrait of Auntie! They are so disgusted Henry hides it in the attic, as they do not expect Flora to visit them for a long time. She arrives much sooner than expected, however, and entirely unannounced. While Mrs. Honeypet tries to entertain Auntie, Henry tries desperately to get the picture hung. He meets with some exciting adventures because Auntie insists on seeing all the rooms in the house. Henry finally has to flee outdoors with the picture. There he gets a clever idea and dashes off to a picture store. Meanwhile, Flora gets into a fierce argument with the Honeypet's husky cook and demands her instant dismissal. This Mrs. Honeypet refuses to do. Then Flora announces that she will leave the house and never return; in addition to cutting them out of her will completely. Angry at Henry's unexplained absence and because she has not seen her picture, Flora, despite Mrs. Honeypet's pleading, makes her way to the front door, and there collides with Henry coming in. He smoothly explains that he had just taken the portrait to an art store to have it suitably framed, and holds up the creation for inspection. The cook, at the quiet urging of the Honeypets, enters and raves about the "wonderful" portrait. This completely restores peace, and from the benign way in which Flora looks at the Honeypets, it is evident that their future happiness and comfort is assured.

"IN THE LATIN QUARTER" (Special—Two Parts—Jan. 2).—At a studio tea given by Jean Duval in honor of his bride, Marie, one of his fellow artists, Andrew Lenique, presents her with an oddly-carved dagger, which she had previously admired. Lenique has painted a beautiful panel in competition for the 50,000 franc prize at the National Gallery. Duval has not entered any of his work, not being able to find a satisfactory model, and it is generally believed Lenique will win. Some weeks later, Manon, a beautiful street-singer, driven by hunger and cruelty, escapes from her brutal father and seeks refuge in the studio building, where she is found and befriended by Duval and Lenique. In her Duval finds his long-sought model and becomes so absorbed in his prize picture he neglects Marie. Manon and Lenique fall in love. When Duval's picture is completed, Lenique jealously realizes it is a greater work than his own and determines to destroy the painting. Marie happens to see Manon faint from weariness in Duval's arms, and misconstrues the situation. She denounces her husband and secretly determines to destroy the picture of her supposed rival, Manon. She attempts to do so, but finds herself unequal to the task of slashing the wonderful creation. Hearing footsteps, she drops the knife and hides. Lenique enters, picks up the knife and as he is about to strike Manon comes into the room. She springs between him and the picture, receiving the knife blow herself. Lanique flees. Duval, finding the dagger, believes his wife guilty of the crime. Fortunately for all concerned Manon recovers and explains that it was an accident. Duval's picture wins the prize and Lenique, now happy in his requited love for Manon, tells him sincerely that he is glad.

THE BLACK SHEEP—(Special—Two Parts—Dec. 28).—Joe, Dr. Frank Clark's worthless brother, is induced to go West to make a new start in life. Shortly after the boy's departure, Ruth Sanders and her parents move into the house next to that occupied by the Clarks. Frank falls in love with Ruth, but says nothing concerning his affection.

A year later, the doctor and his mother receive a message from Joe. The boy has made good and is coming home on a visit. The moment Frank sees his brother, his practised eye fills him with foreboding. Later, the doctor learns that Joe has fallen in love with Ruth and intends to make her his wife.

Then comes the discovery that Joe must never marry. The news drives the boy frantic. In an adjoining room, Mrs. Clark overhears all that passes between the doctor and his brother. The ensuing night is one of terror for Joe, but with the coming of the morning, he regains his assurance.

Joe calls upon Ruth, but the girl shrinks from him in horror. Believing Frank has betrayed him, Joe hastens home and attacks his brother. The struggle brings the mother to the scene. She confesses that her sense of duty had impelled her to break the news to Ruth. Insane, Joe rushes to his room. While Frank endeavors to console his mother, the sound of a shot comes to their ears.

The succeeding months reveal to Ruth that it is Frank who she really loves and she consents to be his wife.

LOVE, OIL AND GREASE—(Dec. 29).—Although neither Ham nor Bud can tell a spark plug from a friction clutch, they land a job in Ray's garage as mechanicians. That same day, Ray angers his sweetheart, Hazel, when she hears him speak on man's superiority to woman. To show him he is wrong, she lands a job as automobile saleswoman. Hazel also breaks their engagement.

Ray learns that an individual is securing free demonstration rides from automobile dealers by fraudulent methods. When I. M. Tiny later requests a demonstration with a view toward purchasing one of Ray's machines, the salesman takes him to be the man who has victimized other dealers.

Hazel sees Ray take Tiny out in a machine and follows in the car which she is demonstrating. Twenty miles from nowhere, Ray dumps Tiny out of the auto and speeds away. Hazel, however, comes to the rescue and takes the man home.

In the meantime, Ham and Bud raise all kinds of mischief. The two go out joy-riding, almost pushing the city off the map. Tiny arrives at Ray's garage and proceeds to beat up the young man. The cyclonic return of Ham and Bud cause the combatants to think the building has fallen atop of them.

Enraged, they go for the joy-riders, who in the meantime have gotten into a fight with each other. Petroleum, oil and bricks are the weapons used. Innocent bystanders suffer equally with those engaged. Ham and Bud finally knock each other out and are dragged to jail.

The battle over, Tiny proceeds to Hazel's garage, where he buys fifteen machines—one for each member of the family. Ray watches in despair. His sheepish countenance and confession that as a salesman she is his superior, soften Hazel's heart and she consents to marry him.

THE DERELICT—(Special—Two Parts—Dec. 30).—Foster Gladwin, infatuated with Mrs. Clinton, his partner's wife, endeavors to embrace her. The woman indignantly repulses him. Mrs. Clinton keeps the incident secret from her husband. Knowing Clinton to be subject to violent headache attacks, Gladwin deliberately plans to bring about the man's downfall. He supplies his partner with headache powders containing a habit-forming drug. Gladwin's fiendish scheme succeeds. A few weeks later sees Clinton a slave to drugs.

Mrs. Clinton is powerless to avert the change which takes place in her husband. In desperation, the wife finally takes their child and returns to her parents. Clinton receives another blow when Gladwin dissolves their partnership. As time passes the man sinks lower down life's ladder until he becomes a bit of human driftwood. A flickering spark of manhood causes him to commence a fight to regain his former place among his fellow men. Realizing he cannot win the battle unaided, Clinton kidnaps his daughter, hoping that her love will give him additional strength.

The loss of her daughter drives Mrs. Clinton frantic. The woman's grief fills Gladwin with remorse and he resolves to right the wrong he has done. The man institutes a search for the missing child, suspecting Clinton to have stolen her. Clinton, meanwhile, conquers his desire for drugs, although the fight almost costs him his life. Gladwin finds him just after he has recovered from a long period of illness. In the library of her home, Mrs. Clinton broods over the loss of her daughter. A voice causes her to raise her head. Standing in the doorway, she sees her husband, in vigorous health, with their child in his arms.

"PATSY BOLIVAR" SERIES NO. 1.—Patsy At School—(Dec. 28).—"Patsy Bolivar" is always in hard luck, and everything he attempts invariably goes wrong. When the careless housemaid substitutes salt for sugar in the sugar bowl. Patsy is thrashed for it by an oversevere parent. When she leaves something on the floor for the master of the house to stumble over he is beaten for that. He has an evil genius, or hoodoo, known as Sykesy, who, finding it an easy matter to commit all kinds of offenses and have the blame thrown on Patsy, works his nefarious power without stint.

At the opening of this number "Jack Prince," a summer boarder with the Bolivar family, entrusts a letter to Patsy for delivery, which contains an offer of marriage to Mary Clare the schoolmistress. But Patsy, fancying that he himself is in love with Mary, jealously gives the letter to Sykesy to deliver, and gathers a large bunch of flowers for the object of his secret affections. On the way to school, Sykesy reads the letter from Jack to Mary, discovers that by the change of one word he can make it the reverse of what was intended, and in this form the letter is delivered. When Patsy places the bouquet on the schoolmistress' desk, Sykesy sprinkles pepper over it. When both these faults are discovered and Patsy is sent supperless to bed, he registers a solemn vow that for the rest of his life he is going to keep busy licking every man, woman or child who says there is no such thing as bad luck.

In Jane Sykes, sister of Sykesy, Patsy has his one champion in the school aside from his little sister, Kitty. She does not attract him, however, for when he is not dreaming of Mary, he favors another schoolgirl, Tillie Grace, who has already selected Sykesy as her sweetheart.

"A COWBOY PASTIME"—(Dec. 29).—Heinie Pretzel and Luke Mutt, aspirants for leadership among the sporting element of Hamville, meet and proceed to liquor up at the village Booze Emporium. Discovering an announcement of a big affair in the Mexican quarter of the village, they decide to seek amusement and to beguile the Mexican damsels by their cute and winning personalties. Bad Ike, a cowpuncher of the Two Bar X Ranch, has also picked this day to acquaint the populace of said hamlet with his importance. Loading his artillery and mounting the hurricane deck of his trusty cayuse, he waxes forth to cut a swath through the village, and spreads woe and desolation in his wake.

Heinie and Luke arrive at Tony's famous restaurant, and proceed to take charge of it but relinquish their claims of proprietorship upon the arrival of Ike and his siege guns. Ike, after wrecking the edifice, departs for other fields of conquest, leaving the two would-be heroes to the tender mercies of the two Mexican ex-highwaymen and cut-throats whom they have insulted by attempting to take unto themselves their promised brides. They commune with their pedal extremities and learn that they are in fit condition to do a mile in less than nothing, closely pursued by the greasers, thirsting for their blood. After a wild chase, they are captured, and are about to be hanged. Bad Ike becomes a hero, he having become peeved at the antics of the Mexican police, which he thought were directed towards him personally, had corralled and herded them over the landscape, and runing them into the scene of Heinie's and Luke's finish. He, unaided, disperses the wild angry mob with his trusty irons, and we leave Heinie, Luke and Ike, a triumvirate unity.

"THE INTRIGUERS"—(Special—Two Parts—Dec. 30).—Viola Vincent and Winthrop Hagen are society parasites living through high class crookedness. Hagen's passion is jewels; Viola's blackmailing. They secure invitations to a society weekend party. Viola finds immediate prey in Henry Blackstone, a diplomatic agent connected with the foreign service. He is in love with Helen Royerson, the daughter of Senator Royerson, at whose house they are all staying. Hagen takes a fancy to Helen and also is deeply fascinated by a set of jewels worn by one of the women. He learns that every night they are deposited in the safe in the library. Helen, thinking only of Henry, becomes jealous of Viola, much to that lady's amusement. The affair culminates when, to get certain papers from Henry, Viola writes him to meet her at a certain place and reminds him of certain jewels that he had promised her in a moment of moonlight fancy. Henry decides to see her and squelch her once for all. On the way he meets Helen, and Viola is left to wait alone. Winthrop waits until the house is quiet and then gets to the safe. In doing so he finds a wallet dropped by Henry. In order to divert suspicion from himself, after securing the jewels, he leaves the wallet by the open safe.

Meanwhile, Viola, thinking Henry asleep, goes to his room to secure the papers, knowing he leaves on the morrow. Henry is dozing in his chair and awakes. Viola, in her awkward predicament, says she came to see him. He tells her she must get out of his room. Helen hearing a noise goes downstairs, discovers the robbery and finds the pocketbook. She recognizes it and believes Henry the culprit. Going back upstairs she surprises Viola coming from Henry's room, and her disillusionment is complete. The next morning Helen tells Henry she knows all and returns his wallet. He doesn't understand and she reminds him of what she saw at his doorway but does not explain about the robbery. Royerson discovers the robbery and tells his guests that they must submit to a search as the house was locked on the inside. Hagen has intrusted Viola with the jewels and pretend righteous indignation. Helen demands that Henry confess and save her guests from insult. He can't understand so she tells of discovering the robbery and the wallet. Henry is hurt and angered but produces the pocketbook for identification. The letter from Viola is found, and read. Its reference to jewels completes the evidence against him. Helen further complicates matters by accusing Viola of getting the jewels when she was in Henry's room. Hagen learning for the first time of Viola's pilgrimage fears for the loss of the jewels. Despite Viola's indignant denial she is searched and the jewels found. Henry stands convicted. The Senator telephones to Henry's chief and he is called to surrender his mission. He leaves after the Senator's refusal to press a charge. Hagen meets Viola outside and refuses to go with her preferring the society of Helen. Viola

Confidential Chat

Do you believe that the film field is already crowded with ——? We know you do, but, there is something lacking. We have become convinced that the public is educated in the matter of stories, photography and acting in films. They are absolute critics in this matter and demand of the manufacturer that he produce quality in each of these subjects. They have passed the novice stage and will go where this kind of film is shown regardless of program.

A man goes home from his day's work, eats his dinner, reads his paper and then wishes to take his family to a theatre. Does he wish to go scouting all around the town gazing at the lithos and posters in the lobbies of the show houses to see which one he wishes to go into? He is too tired for that. He wants to know when he leaves home where he is going and that, if he goes to So & So Theatre, he will at least see a good set of films and be pleased.

The public is tired of being pumped by advertising to go and see a well known "star" and then when they see the picture they find they have seen nothing but the picture of the "star" minus a story and good photography. On the other hand, they hear that a well known book is being pictured. They go to see it and find that the photography is poor, acting is poor and the story has gone to waste.

How will we remedy this? We will do it this way. By putting on a film service of good stories, good photography, and these combined with cooperation with the Exhibitor spell quality and success. Each one essential and the whole lost when one is left out.

The Public Demands This.
We Must Give It to Them.

You cannot imagine a manufacturer sending reels of film to his exchanges and exhibitors for their favor and the film being the first test prints and minus main and sub-titles. Well, that is just what we did. We showed them the goods in the embryo state, undressed and untrimmed, and they enthused over the program. What will they do when they see the finished article? Get in touch with us at once and let us show you our film.

"FATE AND FUGITIVE" — (Special — Two Parts—Dec. 31).—At the dead of night Arthur Gregson is awakened by the stealing into his room of an intruder. Arthur's hand grasps for the switch that will throw on the lights. When he feels the intruder at the foot of his bed he switches on the lights, and then, in his surprise, drops the switch and the lights go off again; the man at the foot of the bed and Arthur are perfect doubles. Then Arthur grasps for the switch again, but too late. The man is gone.

In the morning Arthur thinks it all a dream. That afternoon Arthur meets Grace, whom he loves, and accompanies her on a shopping tour, which winds up at the exterior of a gypsy's stall. Grace is tempted to have her fortune told and Arthur enters with her. The gist of the fortunes are that Grace will leave hurriedly on a long trip, perhaps that day, and that Arthur will follow after her. But Arthur laughingly produces a letter showing that a wonderful business opportunity is his if he does not leave the city, and he shakes his head—he would not follow Grace. Grace is the reverse of flattered, and this leads to a young lovers' quarrel.

Sure enough, the summons comes to Grace to go West to take up her dying brother's ranch, and Arthur arrives to "make up" too late as she is gone. Arthur then attempts to return an engagement ring and get his money back, and quarrels with the jeweler. That night his double again crosses his path, to rob this jewelry store and Arthur is on the scene to be arrested and identified as the culprit when the watchman is found killed. At the trial Arthur is convicted but he prefers flight to imprisonment and makes a spectacular escape. In the West, not hearing from Arthur, Grace is tempted to accept the attentions of Tom Jackson, the unscrupulous sheriff. But Arthur arrives, explains and is secreted by Grace. Tom, jealous and suspicious, finds out about Arthur and sends to the city for a man to come and get him. This man arrives and the sheriff is elated at the prospect of getting rid of a rival. The same day, a wire comes, and the real culprit has been caught. Jackson finally yields to a sudden impulse, says nothing of the telegram and persuades Arthur that suicide is the best way out for him before any one else learns that Arthur is not the man. But Grace makes the discovery, and is the means of stopping Arthur in his intention.

A CLEAN SLATE (Jan. 1).—Raymond Sperry finds his wife Priscilla is not the companion she used to be. She cares more for baby and stays at home. He seeks diversion elsewhere and is introduced to Azamora, a famous dancer, who has taken the town by storm. The dancer flirts with him and Raymond orders a bracelet, engraved with her name. It falls into his wife's hands. She does not know who Azamora is, but the jeweler's clerk pities the wife and introduces her to his sister, who is the dancer's dressmaker. The latter sympathizes with Priscilla.

While in the dancer's dressing room Priscilla's husband calls. Convinced of his deceit Priscilla bursts into tears and when asked says she has a faithless sweetheart. Azamora consoles her and asserts that men are worthless anyhow. To prove it she will call back Raymond, who, though married, wants her to elope. Concealed behind a screen Priscilla hears her husband protest burning love and hears the dancer's promise to sail with him next day to Europe. Raymond is dismissed and Priscilla bursts out, ready to rend the dancer to pieces, but the dancer laughs and says that she is going to the country—to spend her holiday with her children. Priscilla dashes away her tears, thrusts the bracelet box into Azamora's hands and hurries out.

Next morning Raymond goes to the steamer but finds no Azamora. Convinced that he has been duped he returns home and as he and Priscilla breakfast in silence a note is handed him and a package to Priscilla, both from Azamora. The note contains witty advice. Raymond knows that Priscilla knows and pleads forgiveness. Womanlike, she promises and they begin anew with a clean slate.

WHAT HE FORGOT (Jan. 2).—Bill Bailey stopped on the way to his office to watch them make a scene for a motion picture. The director needed another man and asked Bill to pose. He refused until he found out that all he had to do was to kiss the pretty leading woman -then he was willing to rehearse all day and half the night. The scene was made and Bill told a friend a glowing account of how nice it was. The friend, remembering Bill's jealous wife, Bella, suggested he had better not tell her he was kissing another woman. Bill takes his advice, forgetting that Bella is a picture fiend. She and her mother go to the show and are shocked to see Bill in a picture that suggested that the scene was on the level and stolen by the camera. Mother goes home and gets big brother Jack and Bella goes after father. The men folks see the picture and there is such a wild excitement that they are thrown out of the theater. They go to see Bill, but there a policeman saves him and hustles them out. Then comes in the friend who suggested the secrecy. He wants to know what the trouble is. Bill explains matters with a chair.

HE GAVE A MILLION (Jan. 2).—Benjamin Batty is perfectly sane except that he thinks that the world owes him a million dollars. Just for that they keep him in the asylum, because his collection methods are apt to be a trifle violent. But Batty gets out and starts after the money. He holds up a gunsmith's shop and gets a few guns to help his arguments with. The chief of police is warned of his escape and starts after him with the pride of the force. Batty meets several people but it is not until he encounters Jake Piffin, the village dunce, that he meets any encouragement. Jake takes him to the stage door of the opera house, buys a dollar's worth of stage money, and leads Batty back to the asylum, pretending that it is a bank, winning the hundred dollars reward.

BIOGRAPH.

A MATTER OF COURT (Dec. 21).—Clarence and Dave are rivals for Madge's hand. She prefers Dave. They go joy-riding and run over Clarence. He sues Dave for $500.00 damages. The foreman of the jury, Rock Pile Percy, terrorizes the rest into voting as he does, and Clarence gets a verdict of two cents—all his life is worth, according to a letter he wrote Madge.

THE DENTIST'S JANITOR (Dec. 21).—He tries to make an honest dollar while the dentist is out, and gets into trouble. For the dentist's jealous spouse has hired Hemlock Bones and Company to get evidence, and what they see while disguised as window curtains brings Mrs. D.'s wrath on the janitor's head as he flirts with a fair visitor to the office. Hubby gets off scot-free.

THE SUFFERING OF SUSAN (Dec. 24).—Her ambition to be a great actress—"and to be a great actress you've got to suffer, my dear"—causes Susan to dash her sweetheart's hopes. Joe knows she can't act and seeks a way to cure her of her folly. With the aid of the leading lady of a stranded Shakespearian troupe he does so. Susan makes a ridiculous blunder during the performance of the play given by Madame Weep's pupils, and the critics roast her alive. She decides to forego a stage career and take the star part in Joe's household.

THE WAY HOME (Dec. 25).—The female crook and her accomplice rob the clerk and cause him to lose his position. He becomes addicted to drink and ceases to write to the old folks at home. They advertise for boarders, and fate brings the female crook, who is ill, to their home, where she is treated almost as a daughter. When she learns the truth she seeks out the clerk in his haunts. He denounces her, and, in shame, she pleads only to be allowed to take him home. The final moving scene shows her stealing away from the happiness that might have been hers.

HIS UNWITTING CONQUEST (Dec. 26).—To obtain material for his masterpiece, the novelist pays attention to the temperamental actress, studying her as a scientist studies the animals he dissects. He is happily married and cares nothing for the woman. But when the story is done, and she, aroused by the sudden cessation of his visits, comes by night to his home, he learns too late that he has won her love. In a scene of tremendous passion she pleads for his love, then, stung by his brutal admission of the truth, casts his masterpiece into the fire.

ESSANAY.

SWEEDIE COLLECTS FOR CHARITY (Dec. 28).—Mrs. Goodheart, a charity worker, comes home one evening very much discouraged as she is unable to get even a small donation from Mr. Tightwad, the millionaire. She tells Sweedie, the cook, of her failure, so Sweedie decides to try her luck at making him "come across." She goes to his office, where she is refused admittance. She is finally allowed to enter after almost smashing in the door, but Mr. Tighawad absolutely refuses to give her money. She then rolls up her sleeves and prepares to make him produce. He becomes frightened and gives her the amount she demands. Later Sweedie and Mrs. Goodheart, loaded down with provisions, go to the home of a poverty stricken family. Shortly after they arrive, in comes Mr. Tightwad with a policeman. Sweedie gives him one look and he shrinks back, again offering her more money. Mrs. Goodheart and the family are overjoyed, while Sweedie marvels at her own success.

THE WAY OF THE WOMAN (Dec. 29).—Presenting Miss Irene Hough, who was recently voted the most beautiful telephone operator in America. Arnold Cummins, a millionaire, tells his wife of his love for another woman, and informs her that as soon as he can obtain a divorce he intends to marry her. Mrs. Cummins is stunned. She loves her husband and must consider the child. Would not the other woman be merciful? The next day the little boy calls up his father's office and talks to the switchboard girl. She, suspecting that Cummins has domestic troubles, switches the little fellow on Cummins' wire. His heart is softened. That evening when he goes to call on the woman, he finds his wife and child at her home. Mrs. Cummins has pleaded with her to save her home life from ruin. When Cummins arrives she tells him she intends to marry another man. Cummins almost collapses, but he leaves the place with his wife and child, and the next evening finds them once more a happy little family.

TWO DINKY LITTLE DRAMAS OF A NON-SERIOUS KIND (Dec. 30).—Wallace Beery, Charlotte Mineau and Robert Bolder are the principals in "The Fable of Another Side-Track and the Fatal Album." The mother of the girl that Oscar wanted had a good heart, but took no medals for looks. The whole family was in favor of Oscar because he looked like ready money. When talk began to run low, Hazel pulled the family album on him. He thought he had spotted a picture of Hazel, but no, it was a picture of mother when she was nineteen. Oscar figured that if Ma looked like this thirty years ago, Hazel would be a ringer for her thirty years from now, so he eased off. Moral: Cut out the Album Stuff.

Bill Smith and his cousin, J. Edgar Smythe, were medical students. Bill worked like a dog while Edgar plunked a mandolin. Bill graduated with all honors. Edgar just skinned through. They began to practice. Bill was a good fellow, so was called "Doc," while Edgar was known as a specialist and had the aristocrats on his staff. He coined money. Bill's office was filled with the poor and needy who couldn't pay, but nevertheless they received treatment. Moral: Some people still insist that it pays to be on the square.

SNAKEVILLE'S RISING SONS (Dec. 31).—Mustang and Slim are on very friendly terms. The same may be said of their wives, and when Slim's wife warns him that it is Friday the 13th and beware of friendship, he scorns her. He and Mustang go to the saloon together while their wives exchange visits. Sophie, Slim's wife, has made some doughnuts, and her son, after filling his pockets, jumps out the window and runs to meet Mustang's son. The two boys fight over the doughnuts. The old squire happens along, but is unable to part them. He rushes to Slim's home where the two mothers are talking over the village gossip. They hurry to pull their boys apart, but instead become angry and fight. By this time Mustang and Slim have heard the rumpus and hasten to the rescue. They too become angry and fight. The boys finally make up and while their parents are out in front fighting, Slim's son sneaks in and gets the doughnuts. They retire behind the back fence to eat the doughnuts and fix up their difficulties.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE ESCAPED BANDIT (Jan. 2).—A desperate bandit has escaped and finding no one about Broncho's cabin, takes refuge in the attic. Luckily Broncho's wife has accompanied him to work that day, as his arms become paralyzed. She assists him home and uses every possible means to make him relax, but fails. The bandit hears and sees all through a knot hole. The moment Broncho's wife is alone, he crawls through the trap door and tries to force her into telling where their savings are hidden. She puts up a fight, but the odds are too great, her strength is almost gone. Broncho is frantic at seeing the brute beat her, but is unable to move his arms. Just as the bandit is about to strike her with an ax, Broncho regains the use of his arms. He rushes in and floors the outlaw with a blow on the jaw, and while his wife goes for the sheriff he holds the bandit captive.

THE SHANTY AT TREMBLING HILL (Special—Two Parts—Jan. 1).—Richard Scott, a rising young politician of a Canadian city, is ordered to give up his candidacy and take a long rest. He yields when he finds it is the only way to save his life. His fiancee, Frances Warfield, a society belle, is enraged when she hears of it and breaks the engagement. Scott saves the life of Larry O'Brien, a foreman in a lumber camp, when an enemy tries to stab him. The two become much attached and Scott goes to Trembling Hill with him to work, to regain his health. There he meets Gabrielle Boileau, a beautiful but uncultivated girl of the wilds. They fall in love. But Larry, knowing of Scott's wealth and social position, thinks he is trifling with the girl. He tells him that if he deceives her he will break him.

Scott is in deadly earnest, however, and asks Gabrielle to marry him. She consents, but her parents and an aged priest, a friend, fear the match will not result happily. Schuyler, Scott's friend, who is an engineer, then arrives on the scene. He has a note from Frances, asking Scott to come back to her, that she is sorry. When he refuses, Schuyler, thinking that his friend is going to ruin his life, tells the priest. The priest, who has always doubted Scott, shows the note to Gabrielle. She is furious and in her anger seeks Scott and tries to stab him. He goes back to the city.

Larry hears of the trouble and follows Scott to his club. There he tries to kill him, but Schuyler arrives in time to prevent it and declares he is all to blame. Larry demands proof. They go to the Warfield home where they find a large gathering. Frances is about to be married to another man. Larry is satisfied and takes Scott back to Trembling Hill with him. He explains to all that Scott was true to his word. Gabrielle leaps into his arms and they are married by the priest.

EDISON.

MR. DALY'S WEDDING DAY (Dec. 28).—Connors got busy. He took a man posthaste to the Brenner Hotel, because the chap said he had to be married in an hour, and had forgotten his marriage license. A traffic cop halted them, but a five-spot slipped to him ended further trouble. The passenger it was Daly—emerged from the hotel with two telescope cases and told Connors whither to take him. Connors was handed a five-spot. Considerable generosity!

Connors was fondling the bill when up came the traffic cop, and showed his fiver, with the mere comment "phony." Both gentlemen had been stung, and Connors went to Captain Kane to prove it. To the captain and Meservy it was plain that Daly, alias Hackett, was up to his old tricks. Connors took Meservy to the house Daly had entered, and while the detective was prowling around the building, a sailor bade Connors take him and a friend to Chinatown. There, under the pretense of getting a new spark-plug, Connors runs to a garage and calls up Captain Kane. When he returns to the taxi the two birds have flown, and in their stead a stranger, disclosing himself as a detective, asks Connors for data, when Meservy arrives.

The two sleuths exchange greetings and inspect the telescope case left in the taxi. Crocks of opium in it nothing else. Meanwhile, Captain Kane is notified to look out for Roy Haven, a deserter from the cruiser Kennebec, to which a hundred pounds of contraband opium had been sent for destruction. To put Daly and the sailor together was easy figuring. Connors, playing the part of a window-washer, finds work at the spotted house, and thereby locates Daly's room. The plan worked out without disturbing others than Mr. Daly and Roy Haven, petty officer, and as Meservy and his men take the pair in charge, Daly, from his perch on the sill, opens the window and requests Merservy to collect a little taxi bill, three-eighty to be exact, from the balked bridegroom.

THE LESSON OF THE FLAMES (Sixth of "Olive's Opportunities" Series—Dec. 29).—The wilful Olive had fled from her first benefactress, Madame Forresti, and had been dismissed as Mrs. March's maid. Being desperately in need, she seeks and finds employment in a hat trimming loft, where she discovers a thoughtful friend in one of the workers, Becky Gordon. Becky's constant fear is that a fire might break out any moment, and she shows Olive how the building is only a trap. Olive learns from the superintendent of the place that Vance Coleman is the owner. Olive writes him an anonymous letter, begging him to see to it that adequate fire provision be made. The superintendent is notified by Vance to attend to it that improvements be immediately begun, and is given a check that will cover all expenses. The superintendent sees an opportunity to manage a bit of graft, and purchases worn-out hose and worthless fire extinguishers. A roll of crisp bills slipped into the fire-inspector's hand secures his official approval of the equipment.

A week barely passed, when a pile of flimsy material catches fire from a hot iron. The flames spread quickly, the decayed fire hose bursts, the fire escapes collapse under the weight of fleeing workers, and Greed again laughs in his sleeve over the petty cost of life. Olive and Becky find themselves trapped.

THE COURTSHIP OF THE COOKS (Dec. 30).—Angelo and Herman, two chefs at the Limit Hotel, court the Widow O'Hara, laundress of the same place. Undecided whom to take, she gives her word to marry the one who can bring her the more money. That night, while preparing supper, Angelo discovers pearls in the oysters he is opening and Herman finds a diamond ring. They seek a second-hand dealer in jewelry, whose price on what they offer abundantly satisfies them.

Angelo, unseen, makes it uncomfortable for Herman and the widow to spoon in peace. She resolves to get the money, without necessitating herself to marry either of the chefs, and when they have gone to their room she watches them hide the money in their shoes.

She steals into the room and seizes two of the shoes. As she is about to leave the chefs waken, divine what she is about, and follow her to the street, where the policeman, whom the chefs beg to take the widow into custody, turns out to be her long-lost hubby.

The chefs, on their part, receive full measure of joy, for they find out that the widow had made off with the wrong pair of shoes, and that the money is perfectly safe. They again become Damon and Pythias to each other, and agree that, all things considered, it is better to be single and wealthy than married and wise—when it's too late.

SELIG.

CACTUS JAKE, HEARTBREAKER—(Dec. 29).—Hazel Clark, belle of the Diamond "S" Ranch, is fascinated by Cactus Jake, a bold, dashing, reckless cowboy. Good-natured Bill, another cowpuncher, is really in love with Hazel. Mary Donnelly, a very pretty and clever girl, who states that she comes from the East and is in search of health, becomes a guest at the ranch, whereupon Cactus Jake promptly forgets Hazel for the newcomer. Hazel is heartbroken and with the aid of her father, forms a plot for revenge. She announces that she is going away for a visit, but goes only to the next town where she obtains a false mustache and other disguises, and returns to the ranch where her father gives her employment as a gay and dashing young cowpuncher.

She endeavors to win Mary away from Cactus Jake. One day her mustache falls off and her disguise is discovered. Bridget, a fearsome and redheaded, bony Irish woman, enters the camp at this time and corrals Cactus Jake, who is her recreant husband. Pretty Mary proves to be a female detective. Bill then wins the heart of Hazel.

THE OLD LETTER—(Dec. 30).—Lindsey Arnold, a detective, is engaged to marry Mary Dare. He goes abroad and in his absence Mary falls in love with Dick Prendle, a newspaper reporter. She writes Lindsey a letter, asking to be released from their engagement. He still loves Mary and writes a fond note of renunciation. Mary slips the letter in an old book which she is reading at the time.

Dick and she are married, but Dick develops an insane jealousy. He becomes acquainted with Lindsey and brings him home to dinner. Dick immediately becomes jealous. Then Dick finds the letter in the old book, and has a terrible scene with his wife and later with Lindsey.

Dick leaves his signet ring in a washroom where it becomes the innocent cause for charges against him of having committed a robbery. Lindsey works on the case and discovers the real thief. He succeeds in freeing Dick, whereupon Dick forgets his jealousy and comes to learn at last the truth that his wife loves him dearly and that Lindsey is a genuine true friend.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 84 (Dec. 17).—Steamship Maskionge sails from New York with cargo of stores for Belgian relief. Before sailing the big flag of the Belgian Relief Commission is hoisted, a flag that prevents capture of the vessel as a prize of war.

out from the multifarious fauna and flora of the island, those things which would sustain life, nor did his scientific knowledge teach him how to erect a structure which would protect himself and his companions from the elements.

Roderick Random, of athletic build and acquainted with the hardships of tramping through the woods after big game, had been accustomed to killing and cooking his own meat over a campfire. Therefore, it was to Roderick Random that Anne Brewster and Dr. Leigh looked for the wherewithal to maintain life.

Leaving his companions on the beach, Random discovers a roomy cave in which to his great delight he finds rude cooking utensils together with fish-hooks and lines in an excellent state of preservation. There is also a blanket, well preserved, which is immediately given over to Anne. As the weeks lengthen into months, the situation resolves itself into a condition where it means a survival of the fittest. Both Random and Leigh have learned to love the beautiful girl, whom fortune has made their companion on the desert island. Dr. Leigh with his mental superiority, controls Anne's mind, but the physical superiority of Random and his ability to care for her needs, arouses in her breast a feeling of admiration.

As the months pass by, the veneer of refinement which has belonged to Random begins to disappear because of the lack of refinements of civilization. Dr. Leigh notes the unmistakable change in the attitude of Random toward his companion and fear enters his heart as to what will be the final outcome. He realizes that the time will come when he must battle with this powerful brute for the life of the girl he loves as well as for his own life. One day Dr. Leigh finds an old knife in a corner of the cave and he spends several hours surreptitiously sharpening it and restoring it to a condition suitable for use. One night Random forgets all that is manly within him, while his primitive passions direct him to the cave in which Anne is peacefully asleep.

Dr. Leigh, always thoughtful of the comfort and safety of Anne, has made it his custom to sleep at the entrance of the cave. He is aroused by the approach of Random and places himself between the lustful brute and the helpless girl in the cave. The knife gives Dr. Leigh the advantage and he repulses Random after wounding him severely in the arm. The wound is serious and Dr. Leigh refuses to offer surgical relief until Random promises to go to the far end of the island and remain there. Anne has been awakened by the struggle and is terrorized. She overhears the conversation between Dr. Leigh and Random and realizes for the first time the danger to her from this man who has descended into the primitive, while she appreciates the valor and courage of the weakling who has made himself her protector.

One day Anne discovers that she has become afflicted by an intolerable itching on the arms and hands. She informs Dr. Leigh of her discomfort and the doctor attempts to alleviate the affliction. The weeks pass on and Anne continues to complain more and more of the itching which has developed into small and unsightly ulcers, which Dr. Leigh diagnoses as leprosy.

Random, in his wanderings about the island, discovers a skeleton half buried in the sand and with the skeleton he discovers a diary sufficiently preserved, so that he can read the contents. The diary tells the story of a sailor who had been marooned on this desert island, because he was a victim of leprosy. The last entry in the diary tells how he was struggling to reach the cave, but he inscribes a last message, stating that he has failed because he is dying from the horrible disease.

Dr. Leigh attributes to the old blanket the source of the leprosy and he makes preparations to burn it. Random rushes into his presence and tells of his horrible discovery. He demands that the unfortunate girl be sacrificed immediately and her body buried in order to prevent a spread of the disease. Dr. Leigh indignantly refuses to concur in such a plot and again appoints himself Anne's protector.

The craven nature of Random, which has heretofore remained undiscovered, asserts itself with this new development and he becomes practically a raving madman through fear. They fight and Random takes from Dr. Leigh the knife. Then the courageous Doctor, holds between the brutal coward and himself, behind whim Anne stands terrorized, the infected blanket, beyond which Random dare not pass He is afraid if he shall become enveloped in the folds he will become infected also.

A ship is sighted and a boat puts out for the shore. Random tells the story of the leprosy which frightens the sailors, but brave Dr. Leigh sends for the captain to come ashore and unite Anne and himself in wedlock. Random loses no time in going aboard and as the white sails of the vessel are silhouetted against the horizon, Dr. Leigh assumes his self-appointed burden of ministering to the girl he loves. He has repeated aloud and in a firm voice, the words in the simple wedding ceremony:

"Till death do us part."

THE FLOWER OF FAITH (Special—Two Parts—Dec. 28).—Rose Allison, a country girl, loves roses. Howard Payne, a young farmer neighbor, looks upon Rose as the most beautiful girl in the world and comes to see her often. Rose learns to reciprocate his affection and her innocent heart enshrines him as the one man in whom she will place her trust and confidence and whom she will always love. As yet they have not made known their love.

After concluding her gardening for the morning, Rose falls asleep in a hammock and has a dream in which she has a vision of a wonderfully gracious fairy, who tells her that her fate will be linked with the roses that she loves so well and that they will bring sorrow as well as joy to her. She is ambitious and tells Howard that she is determined to go to the city; she wants better and prettier clothes to wear. So one day she packs her few belongings and after bidding Howard good-bye boards the train for the city.

She does not find conditions there as pleasant as she had expected. She has brought with her a few dollars and by carefully hoarding them, she takes a course in stenography at a school and with scraps of employment picked up here and there, she finally secures a position in the office of a broker. She does her work in a satisfactory manner, and feels that she has become established.

Almost a year has passed since Howard took up his mining claim out in the west. His mine is called "The Rosebud," and one day fortune favors him, for he strikes a rich deposit of gold, making his mine exceedingly valuable. Howard is fortunate enough to sell his mine to a group of capitalists from the east, and finds himself amply equipped with money, and a very rich man. So he returns home to his mother and together they go to the city where he buys one of the finest houses there, a house with spacious grounds, and with a large private conservatory, with many kinds of beautiful roses.

One day while visiting a picture auction sale, Howard discovers the canvas entitled "The Rose" and at once recognizes the features of his country sweetheart. He buys the picture and hurriedly ascertains the address of the artist whom he calls upon in an effort to secure the address of Rose. But the artist does not know of Rose's address.

In the meantime, the rose has played another important part in the life of the country girl. Her love for rose blossoms and her impetuosity cause her to surreptitiously extract a rose from the booth of a florist. The theft is observed, and she is pursued and caught. She makes no defense and in the police court is fined. An unexpected friend appears—a stranger—who feeling pity for her unfortunate plight and realizing that she is not bad at heart, pays her fine and then presents her with his card, which tells Rose that he is a theatrical manager. He invites her to call at his office the following morning and gives her employment in his light opera company.

One evening, she receives a beautiful cluster of roses with an invitation to attend a dinner party. She is so pleased with the roses that she asks her manager if it will be proper for her to attend the dinner party. He urges her to do so and agrees to go with her in order to protect her from harm.

At the table, a quarrel arises between two men. A shot is fired and Rose's escort receives a painful wound in the arm. The police are called in and in the excitement the names of various parties mixed up in the unfortunate affair are made public, so that on the following day an article appears in the newspaper making public the scandal.

The manager, angered by his wound, declares that Rose shall no longer remain a member of his company. He orders her discharged at once. One day she walks to the riverside, and hungry, friendless and homeless, she decides to join that great army of lost souls who have cast themselves into eternity. Just as she is about to throw herself into the water a Salvation Army lass espies her and hastens to her side. Rose joins the Salvation Army and takes up the work of helping the poor.

Several months pass by. Rose has become a staunch and much beloved member of the Salvation Army. Her work among the poor and unfortunate has brought her many blessings from those whom she has helped, but in her sadness and loneliness, she has failed to write home; so that no word has been received from her since she left the village.

One afternoon while engaged in her work, Rose is passing through a street filled with the residences of the wealthy. An open door leading into a conservatory filled with roses, attracts her and she unthinkingly steps inside to caress and love the blossoms which give forth their fragrance in a manner to recall her own garden at home. An attendant shuts and locks the door without knowing that anyone is in the conservatory.

She awakens to a sense of her predicament when she tries to leave. Rose wanders from one room to another until she enters the drawing room where Howard has ensconced her portrait as a sort of shrine.

Howard is startled by hearing footsteps in the drawing room and believes that a burglar is in the house. He makes his way cautiously to the room and is astonished to discover his sweetheart there. With joy they embrace and their lips meet again in the sweet kiss of love. They will never be parted again.

VIVIAN'S BEAUTY TEST (Dec. 23).—Sarah and Molly with their husbands arrives at the seashore. There are many pretty girls on the beach and Gus and Mike do not pay any attention to their wives because they are not good looking. They refuse to take them down to the beach but go alone and enjoy some nice flirtation. Vivian, a very pretty girl, arrives at the cottage and Gus and Mike admire her very much. She flirts with them and later meets them. Then they make an appointment to go to the beach together. Vivian returns to the cottage and becomes acquainted with Sarah and Molly, who admire her pretty face and clothes. Vivian promises to make them beautiful if they will consent, and immediately the girls consent. After Vivian's treatment a change of clothing the girls look very beautiful. Vivian then decides to make herself look very homely. She goes down to the beach to meet the men and gives them a surprise. They are shocked when they look at her and run, she chasing after them. Leaving Vivian they see Sarah and Molly, whom they do not recognize; they flirt with them and soon are having a nice little walk down the beach, but this is interrupted by Vivian, who soon returns to the cottage and again dons her pretty clothes and take the make-up from her face. Again she is the pretty girl. She goes down to the porch and gives Hans and Mike a second surprise by introducing them to their wivs.

FAT GIRL'S ROMANCE (Dec. 29).—Hazekar Jones is the owner of a flour mill and a fine case of dyspepsia, also a daughter who is fair, fat and flirty. Squire Longlegs holds a mortgage on the mill and a large bunch of affection for Hazel. He compels Jones to make Hazel promise to be his wife, but Fate, in the shape of Sir Charles De High Ball, comes into the story. While hunting on horseback, Sir Charles shoots a duck. The horse runs away and throws Sir Charles into a tree. The duck hits the fair Hazel in the face. She swears revenge on the shooter. His strength exhausted, Sir Charles falls from the tree and smashes his funny bone. Hazel picks him up, takes him home and nurses him. They love each other, and one dark night Sir Charles elopes with Hazel, carrying her in a wheelbarrow.

A tramp enters the minister's home and arrays himself in the minister's clothes. He is caught by Charles and Hazel, who compel him to marry them, thinking that he is the real thing. They live happily until one day the squire, wearing his fur coat, is mistaken by Sir Charles for a bear. Bing! bang! Sir Charles shoots, and the squire, raging with anger, chases him to his home. Discovered. The jealous squire goes and tells Sir Charles' papa and mamma. Mamma, being a real mother-in-law, breaks up their happy home. Hazel goes back to the old home and spends days pleading with her father to take her back. Sir Charles, warned by wireless telephone of Hazel's misery, comes to her aid. Enter the squire, accompanied by the real minister, who says the marriage was a fake, but, of course, we must have a happy ending, so the minister truly marries Hazel and Sir Charles. Furious, the squire jumps into the mill pond and pa is sent about his business.

JOKER.

LOVE AND SPIRITS (Dec. 23).—Ernie loves Betty, whose father is a strong believer in spiritualism. He calls while a seance is being held at her home. Madam Wande, the medium, has gained considerable control over Betty's father by her demonstrations. Eddie spoils the meeting by applauding vigorously. He is forcibly ejected and confides his predicament to his chum, Ernie. Ernie suggests that perhaps a judicious use of money could persuade the medeium to aid their case. They visit her apartments, and find the Madame quite "approachable." For an agreed sum, she guarantees to have the spirits proclaim Ernie a suitable husband for Betty.

The night of the meeting arrives and after various demonstrations Betty, who is in on the scheme, asks Madame to have the spirits show her her future husband. This is the agreed signal and Ernie, robed in white and ghostly of face, floats out on a wire-rigged pedestal.

Ernie, who is manipulating the machinery behind the black velvet curtain, is accidentally kicked by Ernie in his serial entrance. He loses control of the wires and Ernie tumbles into the group of spiritualists. Both plotters flee. The spiritualists, discovering the trick, pursue "Madame."

Meanwhile Ernie and Betty take another route, which leads to the minister's house. Father, giving up the chase, bethinks him of his daughter and starts after her. Arriving at the parsonage he finds Betty coming down the walk smiling to herself in the knowledge that the knot has been tied. He is about to reprove her when the ghostly Ernie, still in the spiritual make-up, sudenly appears. Father falls upon his knees imploring for mercy. Ernie reveals his identity while Betty's father is still on his knees, forces the old man's blessing.

HOT STUFF (Dec. 26).—Clarence, a tramp, searches the alleys in the rear of a tenement block for a Christmas repast. He observes that bad blood exists between the widows, Brown and Smith. He also observes that each is preparing her respective Christmas dinner. In the widows' absence Clarence is at a loss which to appropriate, the turkey of Mrs. Smith or the goose of Mrs. Brown of stealing it, having caught the latter in her back yard with a suspicious bundle. She does not know that the bundle is only Mrs. Brown's wash which the wind has blown over on her side of the yard. Trouble starts. Mrs. Brown is furious at the accusation.

Clarence returns in search of cranberry sauce. He finds it. Then as a joke he places Mrs. Brown's goose in Mrs. Smith's cooler. More trouble. The two neighbors in rage vow to be revenged. Each prepares an apparently delicious pumpkin pie. One is dosed with cayenne pepper and the other with tobasco sauce. Clarence, meanwhile, has broiled the turkey over his camp fire. He feels he lacks his after dinner cigar. He finds the two prepared pies, and notes their subtle purpose. He carries them to the corner grocer and exchanges them for his desired cigar. When the two women find their pies gone, they rejoice inwardly. They are entertaining a goodly number of Christmas guests and needing the usual pumpkin pie, phone to the corner grocer to supply it. The result can better be imagined than described.

THE VILLAGE POSTMASTER (Dec. 30).—Through the influence of his friend and subsequent son-in-law, Congressman Nolan, Lyman Granite, a storekeeper in the rural village of Calton, is appointed to the office of postmaster. The appointment is viewed with much disfavor by a rival storekeeper, one Tobias Brady, popularly known as "Toby." All goes well with the new postmaster until the coming of the Parcel Post. This great public boon promises to ruin the postmaster. The volume of business done in this department of his store occupies his undivided attention to the exclusion of his regular trade, and pretty soon he has no room in his store for his merchandise and is forced to do the bulk of his trading on the sidewalk. His rival, "Toby," waxes fat and prosperous. The expiration of his term of office brings no relief to the much harassed officer, the Government does not appoint a successor and his bondsmen keep him toeing the mark. He appeals to his son-in-law and Nolan responds by paying him a personal visit. The Congressman meets his father-in-law and half the village in pursuit of a runaway pig. The porkine is captured and Nolan learns that his father-in-law's office has been made the market of exchange for pigs, poultry, babies and other live stock. He promises the old man immediate relief and yielding to his heartfelt prayer he appoints "Toby" to the office, in which act the village postmaster sees the inevitable ruin of his enemy.

A MIXED UP HONEYMOON (Jan. 2).—Henry Peck and wife decide to take a long vacation. On leaving they ask their next door neighbor to run in and air out their house once in a while, giving her the key. She is a shrewd business man, as is shown when Hank Perkins shows up with his bride, all in, after vainly searching the city for a suitable place to spend their honeymoon. The neighbor rents them the Peck's house. But in doing this she does not know that an unforseen and most distressing quarrel has halted the Pecks' vacation on the moment of their departure. Wife in a rage leaves Peck, declaring she is going home. On the way she stops at ma's. Peck seeks solace over the bar.

Later this pair experience mutual yearnings. Peck goes home. He accosts their neighbor. The latter's shrewdness now prompts her to leave the vicinity in a hurry. Wife returns home. Peace and fond love are declared. All is well until, unfortunately, wife spots a bit of the bride's apparel. The next few moments are awful for Peck. That is, until he discovers Perkins' clothes. Then the situation is awful for wife, being made worse when the terrified bridal couple are heard in their bedroom, barricading the door.

Henry Peck then backs up his demands that the supposed lover of wife appear, with his revolver. The frightened young couple call the police, but are arrested themselves as the burglars. Their rent receipt and marriage license, however, clear them, and Peck and wife now appreciating the humor of the situation, decide to allow the honeymooners the use of their premises until their rent expires, and leave once more on their interrupted vacation.

NESTOR.

THE BOY MAYOR (Dec. 15).—Portland, Ore., is the first and only city in the United States having a juvenile form of government, working in co-operation with the city. Annually a committee of prominent business men nominate representative boys for the candidacy of Juvenile Mayor, four Commissioners and City Auditor.

The commission form of government is used, and the Council, composed of the Junior Mayor and the Commissioners elect a Municipal Judge, a City Attorney, a City Treasurer, a Clerk of the Court and a Chief of Police. The Junior Mayor and Chief of Police appoint fifty police boys.

The Junior Police Department works in co-operation with the regular department. They are supposed to assist police officers and to help the prevention of violating the law.

The movement has had a widespread influence for the betterment of Portland, and many other cities are on the point of taking up the movement. Los Angeles, especially, thinks well of the idea. In the Nestor photoplay the parts of the Boy Mayor and his Secretary are played by Messrs. Eugene V. Rich and Earl R. Godwin, the actual holders of these offices.

FOR I HAVE TOILED (Dec. 22).—Hiram Marshall is the owner of a large steel works. His manager devises a scheme whereby a reduction in wages Marshall can save a large sum of money. The manager's secretary objects to the plan, siding with the laboring man. To learn for himself about actual conditions, Hiram Marshall clothes himself as a workingman, secures employment in his own factory. He works at a forge and after a few hours of hard labor, faints from exhaustion. The foreman places him in the care of another workman, who takes him to his own home. Supported by his new friend, who does not realize that the man he has helped is his employer, they arrive at the mansion, during a heated argument between the manager and the secretary. The entrance of the manufacturer, still clothed in the garb of the laborer, causes something of a sensation, which is only climaxed by Marshall declaring that instead of cutting down wages, he is going to run his work on a co-operative plan, his employees to earn their percentage of the profits. A love interest is woven into the play, Marshall's daughter being engaged to the secretary.

WHO STOLE THE BRIDEGROOM (Dec. 25).—Eddie and Bess are to be married and their wedding day arrives. A young married couple, Mr. and Mrs. French, are to be their attendants. Their baby is taken sick and they call for the doctor. Before the M. D. arrives, Eddie comes to the house. Fondling the baby, he tries to soothe its wailing until the doctor arrives, when the small red spots on its face and hands are pronounced smallpox.

Detective Potts is set to watch the house, assisted by a couple of men. In vain Eddie pleads that it is time for the wedding ceremony. At last he eludes them and runs to the bride's house. The guests crowd about the young couple eagerly. Detective Potts and his men run in and announce that Eddie has smallpox. He leads them a chase, but is finally caught and taken back to the French's home. There another doctor arrives and declares the spots are not smallpox, but prickly heat. Eddie hurries back to his bride.

WHEN IT'S ONE OF YOUR OWN (Dec. 29).—Heinrich Gerhardt, a German musician who has come to America with the usual high hopes of the foreigner, meets with reverses, and being unable to secure a professional engagement, takes a position as a waiter in a high-class restaurant. His daughter, Marie, for whose musical education Heinrich sacrifices his savings, knows nothing of her father's position. Thinking that he is playing in an orchestra. To reimburse him, Marie enters the chorus of a musical comedy company, and soon attracts the attention of the manager.

The latter presents her with a bracelet which her father insists upon returning to the giver, realizing that no stranger gives jewelry to a girl without expecting something in return. Later Marie is persuaded to join an after-theater supper party given by her manager. In company with the latter, another chorus girl and a friend of the host, they go to the restaurant where Heinrich is employed. Father and daughter come face to face. A dramatic scene ensues ending by the old musician taking his daughter home after he has been discharged. The next morning a representative of the German Consul calls upon him and presents a cablegram received from the manager of the Grand Opera Company in Berlin, for whom Heinrich formerly played, offering him his old position. Heinrich decides to return to Germany and thus his troubles are ended.

PRUNING THE MOVIES (Jan. 1).—Major Bughouser gets possessed with the idea that he ought to censor the movies, so he appoints a Board of Censors, every member of which must be exactly like himself. They visit a projection room of a film manufacturing company and as the film of a stirring drama is reeled off, they order cuts made in the picture which they consider essential, and the scenes in the picture are shown as originally produced, as they appear when the Bughouser Board is through with them. The original picture was already passed by the National Board of Censors, but Bughouser orders the National Board to be cut, and shows how he would like to do the cutting himself. The last scene shows the gallant Major filling up on his usual favorite food—a large dish of prunes.

ECLAIR.

THE FORTUNES OF MARGARET (Two Parts—Dec. 23).—Lemuel Babcock, a New England farmer, finds that his few acres are insufficient to support him. As the years go by he sinks heavier and heavier into debt. His worthless son, Lemuel, by petty pilferings compels the old man to live from hand to mouth. Isabel, his daughter tries to help keep things together in every possible way.

Babcock is finally compelled to mortgage his farm. By dint of scraping together all his resources and the practice of the most rigid economy the old man finally obtains enough money to pay off the mortgage. Lemuel sees his father hide the money and decides to make his first "haul." The young ne'er-do-well leaves home temporarily with the money. Isabel meets him as he leaves the house, but not knowing of the theft, attaches no importance to her brother's absence of mind and disturbed manner.

Isabel next morning learns from her father of the loss and cannot believe that his son would take the money. When her father closely questions her, Isabel remembers her brother's guilty manner, but in order to shield him she evades her father's questions. Her reticent demeanor arouses the old man's suspicions and he finally openly accuses Isabel of having taken the money.

Heartbroken that her father should believe her capable of such a deed, Isabel does not even deny the accusation. Because of her silence in the face of his reproaches the old man is more than ever convinced of her guilt, and in his rage orders her from his home. Rather than betray her brother, Isabel packs her few belongings and wanders off to the city. As she leaves she sees the agent entering her father's home to announce that on a certain date he will foreclose the mortgage on the old home.

Upon arriving in the great city Isabel, because of her pretty face and alert personality, finds little difficulty in obtaining a position. Her first work is in a clothing factory where by attention to her duties and hard work she soon becomes a forelady. Later by studying at night she becomes a gown designer and attracts the attention of the junior partner of the firm, who encourages her in her efforts to forge ahead.

Back on the farm, meanwhile, things have gone from bad to worse. The old home is sold at auction. Babcock and his son come to the city. There an acquaintance secures the broken-spirited old man a position as a street sweeper. Lemuel sinks lower and lower, frequents the toughest barrooms and forms the acquaintance of gangsters who are worrying the police.

Isabel, now head of the designing department of the great clothing factory, receives a proposal from the junior partner who has assisted her in bettering her position. After a short engagement they are married and with the passage of time a little daughter is born.

Three years later the child escapes from her nurse one day and toddles out into the street. A motor truck is bearing down upon her rapidly. The nurse screams in horror as the child runs directly in its path. Old Babcock, sweeping nearby, sees the child's danger and snatches her from in front of the truck's wheels just in time. The little girl, now thoroughly frightened at her narrow escape, thanks the old man. To show their appreciation the child and her nurse visit the street sweeper daily and give him substantial presents. A strong friendship springs up between them.

Lemuel meanwhile falls in with a band of crooks. The gang decides to burglarize the home of Isabel's husband, and young Babcock is chosen to be the "inside man." He gains entrance to Isabel's home but is outwitted and mortally wounded by a member of the household. Isabel recognizes the burglar as her brother. She obtains her father's address from him before he dies. She sends for the broken-hearted old man and a touching reunion takes place. Isabel's little daughter at once recognizes in "the nice old man" the street sweeper who saved her from the "big wagon," and when Isabel's husband, Austin, learns how the old man saved his daughter's life, he insists that "grandpa" stay for the rest of his days in his home.

FOR THE DEFENSE (Dec. 27).—Jim Barter, a wealthy but wild and dissolute youth, is expelled from college for misconduct. The boy, who has a latent streak of manliness under his careless and pleasure-loving exterior, returns to his home, but his father orders him from the house. The boy starts rapidly down hill. After ten years, Jim, now a tramp and an outcast exiled from society, finds himself in a small western town.

Destitute and hungry he passes longingly by a small restaurant window. Mary, a pretty and good-hearted waitress in the lunchroom, sees the hungry and care-lined face pressed against the window. She brings Jim to the kitchen, and after a meal secures a job for him. Jim losses the job after a week for being drunk. In the heart of the poor unfortunate there has been kindled a spark of love for Mary, the girl who picked him from the gutter.

He pleads for another chance and swears never to touch another drop. Time goes by and the now thoroughly regenerated Jim arouses the jealousy of a Mexican who had been paying court to Mary. The rival places money from the till in Jim's pocket, but, overhearing the plot, Mary interferes. A fight follows and in self-defense Jim shoots the Mexican.

The day of the trial comes and Mary is called as the chief witness. She tells her story of the tramp's reformation. Taking a picture from her pocket she tells the jury of the boy's never-dying love for his dead mother and of his early career. As she reaches this point the prosecuting attorney rises unsteadily and exclaims: "My God! my own son." An affecting verdict of "Not Guilty," father and son, with a new understanding of life, happily leave the courtroom.

THE HERMIT'S SECRET (Jan. 3).—While making a clearance of trees, Dan McGuire's wife, Nellie, is felled. Dan, unable to secure a doctor, revives her only to find that the blow has destroyed her reason. A party of tourists one day hear the sad story and one of them insists that Nellie be placed in an asylum. The thought fills Dan with horror. They leave to notify the village authorities, and Dan, fearful of their return, departs with the childlike Nellie to a distant village. In a cave on the lonesome mountainside they make their home and Dan becomes a hermit. He becomes a trapper and while looked upon as peculiar by the village people, closely guards his secret and meanwhile piles up a sum of money. Christmas eve Dan makes purchase in the village store of dolls and feminine finery, and being taunted by one of the loafers, a fight is narrowly averted. Two of them follow the mountaineer, but engage in a drunken brawl and suspicion immediately points to Dan. Thinking they have discovered his secret Dan repels the sheriff with a fusillade of shots. In helping Nellie to escape, he miscalculates her distance and she falls to the ground unconscious. When the sheriff's posse enter they find Dan bending over the unconscious woman and he tells the skeptical officers his story. He is thrown in jail. After an operation in the village, Nellie's reason is restored. The day of the trial, while Nellie is hurrying down the mountainside to be present she trips over a bush and discovers the gun of the village loafer with his initials cut into it. Nellie rushes to the courtroom and after a dramatic scene is freed, while the guilty man is placed in jail and the happy couple take up their abode in the quiet village.

WITHIN AN INCH OF HIS LIFE (Two Parts—Dec. 30).—The foreman of the "T Tumble T" is killed mysteriously at a point where Dan Henley, a young cow-puncher is known to have passed before the shooting. He and the dead foreman have been courting Elsie Brandon, and this with other details when made known by Searchlight Wilson, a two-gun man, results in Dan's arrest. In the sheriff's absence, Wilson tries to have Dan lynched. Their plans are overheard by Wildcat Thompson, a reckless and well-liked cowboy, by his pal, Pablo Wiggins, a Mexican snake-charmer, and "Foamy White." While White is talking at the jail, Searchlight's crowd make him prisoner and proceed to string him up in the shadow of the courthouse.

Meanwhile from the roof of the courthouse Wildcat and Pablo throw down the latter's trained snakes, which breaks up the lynching bee. "Foamy," now free, rides for help and comes back with twenty men. They find the courthouse blown up and learn that Dan has been rescued by Wildcat. Shortly afterward the sheriff arrives and Wildcat is arrested for aiding Dan to escape. The fearless young cowboy forces a hearing and it is shown that the dead foreman had quarrelled with an Arizona cowboy over Elsie Brandon. At the time of his death he was shown to have been riding to notify the sheriff of some rustling which had taken place and had in his possession the guilty man's name.

Five of the cowboys write down the name of the man they believe to be guilty of the rustling. The judge calls the slips in and on all the name of Searchlight Wilson appears. In the melee which follows, Searchlight escapes and Wildcat goes after the two-gun man with

THE MANICURE GIRL (Dec. 27).—Disruption of the entire barber shop force follows in the wake of the numerous love affairs of the fickle manicure girl.

With two lovers on the outside, and the head barber on the inside of the shop, she manages to keep things running smoothly until Billie, attracted by the beauty, forces himself to the front. Encouraged on the street by the fickle beauty, he follows her to the shop, where he arouses the jealousy of the head barber.

Believing himself to be the favored lover, the head barber follows the manicure girl from the shop only to find her in the company of another man, who resents his intrusion, and he is compelled to return to the shop to nurse the black eye and the bruises acquired in the encounter.

Hastening to procure refreshments for the girl, who has collapsed during the fight, the victor finds on his return another lover in possession of the now fully recovered lady. This being a small man, he disposes of him by throwing him in the lake. Not seeing him come up he believes he has committed murder, and feeling that a disguise is necessary to his getaway, he decides to sacrifice his mustache. Hastening to the nearest barber shop he recognizes his customer and proceeds to get even.

He escapes, but is overtaken by the barber and his assistants, who have lent their aid to the chase. The unlucky head barber in a clinch with his rival, is mistaken for the runaway and receives a severe thrashing at the hands of his assistants. Realizing their mistake, a fresh effort is made to catch the runaway, but even as his hands close on him, the head barber discovers the fickle manicure girl seated at a short distance between the now favored Billie and another lover bestowing kisses first to one side and then to the other.

Disgusted, the rival and the head barber throw themselves into a conveniently standing dump cart and are carried off to the city dump.

GEM AND GERMS (Jan. 3).—His spoilt and pretty daughter, Gem, and a lovely dog, make the old chemist's days far from the serene ones his labors in his laboratory call for. The wilful daughter, left to her own devices, selects the most unlikely of her suitors, and with feminine contrariness thrusts him upon father for approval. Aroused, the old chemist endeavors to separate the lovers by locking the girl in her room, but finds himself compelled to repeat the forceful ejecting of the persistent lover many times over.

Determined by her father's refusal, the daughter and her lover plan to get even with father, who, believing that he has made a wonderful discovery, has called in two of the scientists of his city to test the mixture. The daughter and her lover replace the discovery with a harmless mixture to which the dog takes kindly. Entering the laboratory, the scientists are amazed to find the dog drinking the supposed poison. Fearing his bite they lose no time in making their getaway. Ever ready for a chase, the lively dog goes after them with a will. Their frantic efforts to escape result in disaster to all encountered en route. Believing the dog to be mad, a general call is turned in for the police.

Gem and her lover rush to the minister's house, but the minister refuses to marry the pair and tries to give them the slip. The lovers give chase. Overtaken at the lake's edge, he is compelled to perform the ceremony. Driven by the dog to a high bridge, the scientists decide to take to water rather than risk a bite. Not caring for the jump, the dog leaves the bridge and encounters the police, but discovering his mistress, he makes a glad rush to the consternation of the minister, whose fright precipitates the three into the lake, where the dog joins them. The yells of the scientists and the bridal party bring the police to the rescue and the lake is filled with swimmers, whose struggles show little enjoyment in their dip.

THE SUBMARINE SPY (Two Parts—Dec. 28).—Ethel Graham and Billy, a young naval ensign, are in love but Ethel's father, a captain in the navy, tells Billy that before he can marry he must obtain promotion. Bardoni, a foreign spy, learns that Ethel's father is to take out a new submarine, for its trial under water. Bardoni asks permission of Billy to visit the submarine before her try-out.

While examining the mechanism of the ship Billy points out to Bardoni an emergency valve upon which the lives of all depend. Bardoni secretly removes the valve. A few minutes after Bardoni has left Captain Graham and his crew start off in the submarine. When they have submerged her a sailor reports: "Captain, something's wrong with the machinery! She's sinking too fast."

Captain Graham discovers when the ship touches bottom that the emergency valve has been stolen. All hope is given up. Billy volunteers to be shot through the torpedo tube and to go for aid. Shot to the surface by compressed air, Billy brings back a boat-load of sailors, a windlass and a diver. In the submarine Captain Graham and his men are fast dying for want of air. Billy lowers a diver who taps on the sides of the submarine with a hammer and revives the hopes of the crew and their captain.

The sailors inside the submerged submarine excitedly watch the dial which records the depths reached by the ship. As the sailors above with the windlass, and the chains are attached around the submarine, the indicator on the dial steadily falls. The crew cheer when they realize that they are fast being pulled to the surface of the ocean. After long and hard work the submarine finally rises to the surface of the sea and the sailors, one by one, follow their captain up out of the interior to the fresh air. Upon reaching shore the sailors pick Billy up enthusiastically and carry him off.

Because of his daring exploit, Captain Graham recommends Billy for promotion. Meanwhile, Billy's engagement is announced. Bardoni is snubbed by Ethel who, when she learns of the theft of the emergency valve, at once suspects the foreign spy, Bardoni, acting upon several strong hints, hurriedly leaves the naval station for more comfortable parts. In due time, Billy's promotion comes along and he and Ethel are married.

WINNING A PRIZE (Dec. 31).—Silas Brown, in order to advertise his inn and boost fishing, offers a prize of one hundred dollars to the person catching the largest fish, an idea which greatly pleased his daughter, who loves the sport, and who soon attracts the attention of the guests by catching a large fish.

Learning of the contest and feeling the need of a rest from his society gaities, Charles Morton decides to visit the Fishkill Inn. Upon his arrival he is haled with joy by the female guests who lionize him to his great disgust. Thinking to free himself from their unwelcome attentions, he plans with his valet to have a letter sent to himself telling of the total loss of his fortune and then to retire to a tent in the nearby woods, where he can enjoy the fishing and solitude to his content. The plan works and he and the valet repair to the tent where the valet is to act as man of all works.

Elsie learning of Charles' supposed misfortune and taking pity on him, furnishes the valet a basket of food from the Inn kitchen. Charles, being struck by this simple act of friendliness, and meeting her by the pool later, is soon deeply interested in her. Charles proves a poor fisherman as he enjoys her companionship and the quiet of the woods more than the sport. Elsie, thinking of his financial condition, and that the prize of $100 would greatly benefit him, contrives to substitute a large fish which she catches for the small one on his line, so that he might win the prize. Charles awakens at the moment she attaches it to his hook, but seeing in this act her regard for him carries out her plan. He wins the prize. Then, feeling that he has also won the heart of Elsie and being deeply in love with her, he has his valet fetch in another letter telling of the restoration of his fortune, and all crowd around him in congratulation.

TERENCE O'ROURKE, "GENTLEMAN ADVENTURER," SERIES NO. 4, "THE KING AND THE MAN" (Two Parts—Dec. 21).—Terence O'Rourke in the adventure of "The King and the Man," undertakes to guard the King of a Balkan state against the machinations of Russian secret service agents. These agents, the Irish adventurer learns, are intent upon achieving their end, no matter what the cost. O'Rourke, however, is just as determined that if his trusty blade and automobile pistol are in working order they will not succeed.

On his way to Tangiers he stops over for the night at Treneva, capital of Zeta on the Russian frontier. Zeta is ruled by King Aribet. King Aribet is in love with Princess Sophia of Zeta, but is unable to marry her because of the laws of his country, which forbid a King's marrying anyone unless they be of the royal blood of another country.

O'Rourke receives a message from the Prime Minister of Zeta, telling him that there is a plot on foot to assassinate the King, or to force his abdication. The Russian secret service agents are at the bottom of the plot, as Russia desires Zeta in order to gain a foothold in the Mediterranean. O'Rourke is offered the commission of protecting the King and accepts. The King realizes that his marriage to the Princess cannot take place, and bids her farewell, leaving for his hunting lodge in the mountains to forget.

The plotters against the throne hold their last meeting. Dietas, a loyal supporter of the King, tries to dissuade them from carrying out their plans, threatening to inform against them. They endeavor to make him prisoner, but although wounded, he makes his escape. He tells the

Tomavenis, of Russia's secret service, learns of her plans and attempts to prevent her from carrying them out. O'Rourke interferes and he and the Princess proceed on their way to warn the King. The Princess, at this meeting, notes the remarkable resemblance of O'Rourke to the King, and comments upon it. They arrive at the Lodge, and O'Rourke persuades King Aribet to take the ladies to a place of safety, while he delays pursuit. He puts on the King's clothes and turns out the lights to face the conspirators, who believe him to be the King. The deception is not discovered until the signing of the abdication. At this moment the King returns, and when the conspirators promise that they will allow him to leave the country in safety, he gives up all right to the throne and finds happiness in the love of Princess Sophia.

THE ACCUSATION (Two Parts—Dec 25).—James Dayton and John Dix are rivals for the hand and affections of pretty Cora Lund, the only daughter of Colonel Lund, a retired army officer. Colonel Lund has spent a lifetime in the army and has seen service on many battlefields. Young Dayton, because of his frank, unassuming manner, quickly wins the grizzled old veteran's regard. In this judgment Cora Lund also concurs. Something secretive in Dix's manner has created an unfavorable impression against the man in her mind and, being a woman, she persists in her dislike, "just because" at a dinner party Colonel Lund announces the engagement of his daughter to Dayton and the young woman is showered with congratulations from all sides. Dix takes his dismissal with bad grace and at the dinner party attracts attention to himself by his taciturn, hang-dog air. Later, when the rejected suitor sees Dayton and his fiancee embracing, his smouldering jealousy flames into hate and he plans to be revenged upon the man who has won from him the woman he coveted.

Although his friends in society are unaware of it, Dix wronged Mary Dix, a working girl, who has borne him a child. Angered beyond measure by the fruits of his sin, Dix has cast the mother aside and refused to provide for his own flesh and blood. In considering various means of revenging himself upon Dayton, Dix decides to use his unfortunate victim to further his ends. Accordingly he forces the girl to write a letter to Colonel Lund, Cora's father, accusing Dayton of being the father of the baby. Dix promises his common-law wife that if she will carry out the deception he will marry her; a promise which, of course, he never intends keeping. In order to prove the truth of his insinuation as to Dayton's lack of moral character, Dix forces Mary to come with him to the Lund home where the girl tells the Colonel and his daughter the story of Dayton's relations with her. At first the Colonel and Cora are loath to believe the girl's story, but when she gives intimate data and other circumstantial evidence manufactured by the man who has wronged her, Lund and his daughter reluctantly accept as true the tale told by the girl.

Upon seeing his plan has partially succeeded, Dix immediately starts to make violent love to Cora. Broken-hearted by Dix's allegations regarding her fiance, Cora is too dejected to take much notice of Dix's renewed attentions. While father, daughter, Dix and the woman he has wronged are still in the Lund home, Dayton enters and is confronted by Mary. Angered as well as saddened by the injustice of his position, and the attitude of his fiance and Colonel Lund, Dayton leaves the house, crushed and despondent. Dix exults in his rival's discomfiture.

Dix has overlooked one thing in his carefully conceived plot. Learning that her common law husband plans to marry Cora, Mary hunts Dix out and demands he fulfill his pledge of marriage. Dix laughs at her and makes it plain that he never will acknowledge that he is the father of her child. Finding she has been duped, Mary wanders about half dazed by her grief. As she walks bewildered through the street she comes upon Dayton. Dayton reproaches Mary for the lie which has estranged him from his fiancee. Under his fierce questioning the grief-stricken girl breaks down and sobs out her story. Dayton is promised by the young woman that she will tell the truth to Colonel Lund.

Mary is about to enter the Lund home when Dix comes out. The desperate look in her eyes warns him of his danger and he struggles to prevent her from going inside and exposing him. Mary attempts to break away from him and Dix, angered beyond measure by her actions, draws a revolver and shoots. The bullet enters Mary's arm. Dayton, who has followed Mary to see that she fulfills her promise, rushes to her help and grapples with Dix in time to prevent him from shooting her again. Mary is taken into the house, where her wound is dressed. Later she confesses to Colonel Lund and Cora and accuses Dix. Dayton forces Dix to confess his perfidy. Colonel Lund, in agreeing not to press a charge against Dix, exacts a promise from the latter that he will marry the girl he has wronged, and Dix shamed into promising by Cora, agrees to do so at once. The closing scene of this intensely dramatic photoplay shows Colonel Lund, Cora and Dayton in a happy group, making plans for the coming wedding ceremony.

THE VIRTUOSO (Dec. 28).—Helga Moran, a young violinist, desiring to play before a great manager, sends in her card only to be rebuffed by the office brat. She returns to the studio of her friends and plays for them. They are fascinated, so much so that they forget the supper cooking on the stove. After the meal Helga returns to the office.

The manager is looking for a man to play a lead in one of his productions. He is pestered by all sorts of types; song and dance men, an old opera singer, an old tragedian who still thinks he can play a juvenile, when the manager is almost mad with the pests. There comes into his office a beautiful girl with her violin; he would drive her out as he has the others, but she will not go; instead she plays to him.

He is enchanted by her music; they fade from the office into a wonderful glade; he is sleeping at the base of a grand oak tree. Suddenly the tree opens and out dances a nymph; she inhales the fresh air, dusts off the flowers and plays with the rabbits, awakens the sleeping knights, then runs away. With Sir Knight she is persuaded across field and dale, up deep slopes, and romps with him in hot chase. Then back to the office. She finishes her selection; he falls to his knees enchanted. He offers her his all, his heart and his hand, but she is enraged to think her music could affect a man so. She breaks her violin over his head and leaves.

THE BEAUTIFUL UNKNOWN (Three Parts Jan. 1).—In the little kingdom of Transylvania, the young Prince Ferdinand, heir to the throne, causes great uneasiness among his ministers because of wilfulness and lack of appreciation of his position. The Prime Minister and the Prince's mother fearing that he will continue his wild pranks and evil habits, become very anxious to have him marry. Thinking to find a suitable mate for him, they invite the three daughters of the King of Bosnia to attend a grand ball to be given in honor of the Prince. On the arrival of the many guests at the Royal Palace the young Prince Ferdinand is found to be missing.

The three Princesses have journeyed many miles to attend the ball and to meet the young heir, thinking perhaps to win his regard, are greatly disappointed that after being introduced to them he showed no interest whatsoever, and left immediately and did not appear at the ball. Yona, the eldest of the Princesses, finding that Ferdinand has slipped away with his chum to visit the opera house, where he might see ballet dancers, persuades one of the ministers to guide her to his box. Yona, seeing that Ferdinand was greatly interested in the performance, and not being observed, returns to the ball.

The next day she decided to appear on the stage before him as an unknown dancer, so securing admission to the stage, she persuaded the ballet master to allow her to appear. That night she dances before the Prince, being advertised as the Beautiful Unknown, and Ferdinand, greatly attracted by her personality and clever dancing, determines to meet her. Seeking out the ballet master, he repaired to the door of her dressing room, but Yona refused to be seen. Ferdinand not, however, to be defeated in his desire, commanded her to appear at the Royal Palace on the morrow and dance at the Great Fete in the gardens. Yona succeeded in returning to the Palace in secret. The next day at the Fete she slipped from the Palace garbed to dance as a woodland nymph and when her turn to appear came she danced about the fountain with furious abandon. The court, seeing Ferdinand fascinated by the dancer, remonstrated with him, fearing that he would cause another scandal; but Ferdinand, not heeding them, rushed to the fountain to see the Beautiful Unknown at close range. As Yona saw him rush in, she threw off her disguise and Ferdinand recognized her as the Princess of Bosnia. Seizing his cloak, he placed it about her to cover her from the view of the guests and they, recognizing her also and being overjoyed to find that the Prince had fallen in love with a Princess, left them to explain to each other in love's own language.

THE BIG SISTER'S CHRISTMAS (Dec. 24).—Marty and her "big sister" Ann live with their father, Martin Towne, in a tenement. Marty attends a party at the Settlement House along with other young people, among them her sweetheart, Bob. While there Marty is introduced to John Waters, a popular young artist, who has a drawing class at the settlement. Marty always has had some little talent in drawing and Waters becomes interested in her, much to Bob's displeasure.

He is invited to have supper with them the next evening and accepts the invitation. It is then he meets and becomes interested in Marty's self-sacrificing sister, Ann. Ann believes that Waters is interested in Marty in other ways than from an artistic standpoint, and although she is attracted to the clean-cut young fellow, she feels she cannot allow herself to stand between her sister and her sweetheart. She therefore does not encourage Waters. Waters becomes a more-than-welcome guest at the humble tenement house.

Ann secretly has been making a gorgeous new dress for Marty as a Christmas gift. Bob, Marty's sweetheart, is there and there is great merry-making. Ann and Marty are shut in a side room, while Waters, with Bob's assistance, brings in and sets up a beautiful Christmas tree. In the other room Ann and Marty are jubilant.

In her excitement Marty accidentally tips over a lamp and her dress catches fire. Ann endeavors to put it out with her bare hands. Hearing the noise the others break into the bedroom. Waters puts out the fire, while Ann hides her blistered hands behind her. He discovers her injury and she is cared for. They then adjourn to the living room, where the Christmas tree is a blaze of glory.

Waters then opens his gift packages. Marty's father receives a notice of a bank clerkship secured for him by Waters. Marty receives a note from the committee of the Students' Art League of her election to membership through the efforts of John Waters. At last when Ann has gone into her own room to cry, believing she has been forgotten in the general distribution of presents, Waters presents her with a singularly small package, which upon opening she finds contains a ring. The closing scene of the photoplay shows Ann, her head pillowed on Waters' chest, looking out through the tenement window at the gently falling snow as it covers the earth in its winding sheet.

HER ESCAPE (Dec. 27—Two Parts).—Tom Walsh, his daughter, Pauline, and his son, Pete, live in a tenement known to the police as a nest of crooks. Tom and Pete force Pauline to act as their "lookout" in various small robberies by means of which they make their living. Pauline, however, is good at heart and, although forced to meet crooks and ex-convicts in her father's squalid apartment, has little liking for the life. Tom and Pete plan a new "job" and appoint Pauline to keep watch for patrolmen and passersby. While acting as "lookout," Pauline becomes interested in a band of Salvation Army singers and enters into conversation with the captain of the band. The captain gives her a pamphlet to read, which greatly influences her life.

Meanwhile Tom and Pete have been frightened away from the house they planned to rob. They find Pauline gone from the spot where they told her to stay. Angered by her desertion they go home to await her coming. When Pauline arrives she tells her father of her experience with the Salvation Army band and begs her father to lead an honest life. Enraged by her talk, Old Man Walsh starts after her with a large knife, intent on killing her. Pauline rushes from the room, pursued by her father. Walsh stumbles at the head of the stairs in his drunken anger, falls and is killed. Pete returns from the corner saloon and finds his father dead. In his intoxicated condition the sight interests him little. He inquires for Pauline and when he learns that she is gone he leaves the tenement intent upon bringing her back.

Pauline obtains a cheap room in a better part of the city and in a few days secures a position as nurse in a wealthy family which is preparing to leave for the west. Her brother finds out where she is working, however, and when she leaves town follows on the brake beams of the same train. Pauline believes that she has left her old life behind, but one day while in the park with her little charge her brother confronts her. She refuses to go with him and asks him to leave her alone in peace. Pete is about to drag her away when Paul Reeves, a rich young mine owner, knocks Pete down. Reeves introduces himself to Pauline and sees her safely home. A strong friendship springs up between the young people.

Peter, in an ugly mood after his beating, enters a cheap saloon, where he finds a crowd of loafers bullying an emaciated "dope" fiend. Pete knocks several of them down and thereby gains the deep devotion of the unfortunate. Meanwhile Paul Reeves and Pauline become increasingly fond of each other and after a short courtship are married. Reeves builds a beautiful home for his young wife and does his best to allay her fears of her brother's return.

Pete, in the meantime, has become the leader of the gang which he soundly thrashed. After a successful raid he gets drunk. Shaking an unopened beer bottle the neck bursts from the gases within and blinds him for life. The dope fiend whom he has befriended nurses him back to health and waits upon his idol hand and foot. The "dope" reads for hours each day to Pete, who becomes the brains of the gang and engineers their operations. While the "dope" reads the papers for likely "prospects" Pete hears of his sister's wedding and orders the "dope fiend" to take down the address.

That evening, led by his companion, Pete arrives at his sister's mansion. Pauline invites her brother in and commiserates with him on his misfortune. Pete, however, pays no attention to her sympathetic expressions, but bides his time to be revenged.

Pauline leads him into a room and Pete, who has familiarized himself with the locations of the doors and windows in a hurried survey of the room during his sister's absence, locks the doors on her. He then demands a large amount of money. When Pauline refuses him he attempts to choke her.

Pauline eludes him and fights desperately for her life. Finally she reaches the door and escapes down the stairs. Attempting to follow her, Pete falls down the steps and breaks his neck.

He is still breathing when Pauline's husband enters. Pauline tells her husband of her narrow escape from death and the photoplay ends with husband and wife locked in each other's arms, the only bar to their happiness effectually removed.

HOUNDED (Dec. 31).—Jim Nolan and his partner, Mart, are doing time for the robbery of Bolland's bank. The banker's daughter, Mary, while doing criminal reform work, becomes interested in Jim. Influenced by her wholesome personality, Jim is inspired to "go straight." At the expiration of his term, Mary uses her social influence to get him a position and help him make good. Jim is promoted rapidly, but the stigma of "jailbird" sticks to him and the instinct to steal is revived.

Fearing that he will yield, Jim appeals to his one friend, Mary, to help him in his fight against temptation. She does so. The proud old banker disapproves of his daughter's growing friendship with the "jailbird," but Mary stands by Jim. The friendship of Mary and Jim ripens into love. Bolland disowns his daughter. She marries Jim. In his loneliness the banker regrets his action and tries to win Mary away from Jim. To do this he causes him to lose his position and hounds him from place to place, using his influence to discredit Jim in every way possible.

Driven to the wall Jim puts up a hard fight. A mortgage on the little home is due, and without means with which to meet the obligation, Jim foresees his wife and babe turned into the streets. In despair, he listens to the voice of the tempter, Mart, who plans another robbery of Bolland's bank with the cooperation of Newton, a thieving bank clerk.

After a fight with temptation, Jim yields, and together they loot the bank. They are forced to lock a watchman in a vault, where he dies. The clerk, Newton, is arrested for the crime. He turns evidence, implicating Jim and Mart. When arrested for the crime, Jim keeps the truth from his wife and is dragged to prison with the picture in his heart of Mary as he last sees her, standing in the doorway with their baby clasped to her breast.

This picture is his one source of consolation during the dark hours which follow The evidence of Newton convicts Jim and his companion and they are given a life sentence. Refusing to renounce her faith in Jim, Mary is driven from the little home, and finally is stricken during an epidemic, and she and the child die.

On hearing this Jim becomes a hopeless degenerate, hating the world in general and Newton, the informer, in particular. His visions of his loved ones are always blurred by the accusing finger of the informer. Jim's desire for revenge grows to a maniacal fury.

He has contrived to keep some of the stolen bank notes, and with these he bribes a guard into releasing him for a few hours, promising to return after having seen his mother, whom he claims is dying. Newton, the informer, has reformed and is now traveling the "straight and narrow." He has a wife and child, a beautiful home and happiness. As he sits in his luxurious library he is not aware of the grinning shadow in stripes standing behind him.

The "Jailbird" has come for revenge. There is a struggle, but Jim in his fury is the stronger. Newton, bound to a table and gagged, looks up at the grinning face and smooth shaven head of the "Jailbird." Then there is a swish of skirts, a startled exclamation. Jim turns to see a woman standing in the doorway with a baby clasped to her breast. In the weakened condition of his mind, Jim imagines them to be his own wife and child come back to guide him in the "straight way." All thought of revenge fades his mind, the knife drops from his hand, he steals from the house and back toward the prison.

THE SIN OF OLGA BRANDT (Jan. 3).—Olga Brandt, a stenographer in the office of Stephen Leslie, an attorney, receives a pitifully small salary. In addition she is handicapped by having the sole care of an invalid sister. A capital operation is necessary to save the girl's life. Olga, being entirely without money, appeals to her employer. He offers to furnish the money on terms that the girl, through the urgency of her sister's case, is finally forced to accept. The operation is performed and the girl is removed to the seaside.

Three months later Olga learns that her sister is dead. The futility of her sacrifice and her natural antipathy to the life she is forced to lead leads her to flee from the home of her betrayer. One of the truly good men of this world, the Reverend John Armstrong, finds her wandering disconsolately through the streets, and he, claiming a former acquaintance with her, takes her to the home of his mother. As time goes on, the young people, mutually attracted long ago, become engaged. John receives a call to a country village, and on the eve of his departure for the scene of his future labors, he and Olga are married.

A year later the little village is stirred by the exhibition of a moving picture entitled, "Shall We Forgive Her?" Mr. Jellice, one of the deacons of John's church, attempts to prevent the exhibition, and by doing so becomes embroiled in a law suit with the manager of the theater. John sends for legal assistance, the attorney selected being Stephen Leslie. Leslie arrives and in his visit to the parsonage meets the woman he betrayed. He upbraids her for leaving him and proposes that they resume their former relations. When Olga refuses he threatends to expose her. The timely arrival of John and the committee on their way to the theater saves Olga for the time being. The party enter the theater, the committee agreeing to abide by John's verdict on the picture. At the parsonage, Olga determines to give up her fight. She sees no escape for Leslie but in flight. She writes a hurried letter to John and bids good-bye to the home in which she had found true happiness and contentment. On her way to the depot she is attracted to the theater and finally makes up her mind to enter. The picture tells the story of a sacrifice such as her own. The despairing girl watches it with breathless interest. At the culmination of a tense, dramatic scene John, rising in his seat, praises the picture and upholds the moral which it teaches. A vision of the Saviour is shown and the sublime words, "Judge Not Lest You Be Judged," are flashed before the tear-dimmed eyes of the audience.

Subsequently Olga and Leslie meet. His entire attitude is changed and the pictured story has worked his reformation. He implores Olga's forgiveness and begs her to return to her husband. John, arriving home, finds the letter of confession. He is stunned for the moment, but seeing his sorrowing wife on her knees, he remembers the sublime words of his Divine Master—"Judge Not Lest You Too Be Judged"—and takes the erring but repentant woman to his arms.

CARMEN'S ROMANCE (Dec. 21).—Carmen and Buster are country sweethearts. All goes well until the city chap Chandler arrives and cops Carmen, which anrages Buster to such an extent that he challenges Chandler to a fight, which results in Chandler giving him a sound thrashing. Later Chandler leaves Carmen in the garden and goes to the well to get a drink; he is seen by Buster who waits until he sees Chandler peering down into the well, then Buster sneaks up and hits Chandler with a stick, which accidentally knocks him into the depth below. Buster is terrified and in trying to rescue Chandler he also falls into the well. Both boys in the well call for help and are heard by Carmen, who dashes to their rescue, but finds she has not enough strength to lift them to the top by means of the windlass. Carmen hurries off in search of help. She finds Billy and with their combined effort they finally rescue the boys. Billy then scolds Buster for his wrong doing and takes him off the set—leaving Carmen and Chandler to enjoy themselves together.

INNOCENT DAD (Dec. 24).—Arthur and Papa, who are spending a day at the beach, become separated; Papa becomes hungry and enters a cafe where he has an argument with a husky waiter which results in a fight and Papa, much frightened, hides under a table. At this moment Arthur enters accompanied by a beautiful girl whom he has become acquainted with through a flirtation on the boardwalk. Arthur and his friend take seats at the table under which Papa is hiding and are served by the husky waiter, Papa thereby getting no chance to escape. In the meantime the girl's sweetheart, who is a villainous looking character, starts in search for her and becomes a raving maniac when he is told she has entered the cafe with Arthur. He draws his gun and dashes into the cafe; Arthur, seeing him coming, quickly disappears. Papa now sees his chance to escape and in making his getaway carries table and all with him. He is seen by the sweetheart, who, thinking he is Arthur, gives chase, taking shots at him. Papa seeks to escape by swimming out in the water and climbing the mast of a sunken ship. The lover, foiled, makes use of an old cannon which he finds on the beach and takes shots at Papa, who still clings to the mast. About the third shot the cannon explodes, blowing the sweetheart through the air. After a flight through the clouds he falls on Papa. Both fall off the mast and finish their fight in the water.

THE CHEF'S REVENGE (Dec. 28).—The restaurant is crowded with hungry patrons and the proprietor is frantic at the absence of his chief chef, Debean, who is late as usual. Soon Debean arrives and after affectionately bidding the pretty cashier good morning he slowly draws off his kid gloves and majestically surveys the hungry crowd. The proprietor greets him like a long lost brother and proudly escorts Debean to the kitchen, where the army of helpers await their chief's arrival and things soon start to hum. Soon Mr. Millions, a millionaire grouch, who is very particular about his meals, enters the cafe. The proprietor to show his great esteem for Mr. Millions decides that the millionaire shall give his order direct to the chief chef. Debean is called and on getting the order he retires to the kitchen and after many mishaps the steak is garnished, fit for a king. Debean is so pleased with his work that he decides he will serve the meal himself. Debean waits on the millionaire in grand style, loads the table with good things to eat, then retires to the kitchen with the idea that he is the greatest chef in the world. His dream does not last long, for Millions having a peevish grouch that morning finds fault with everything, which results in a fight between himself and the proprietor in which the steak is used as a deadly weapon, people being knocked right and left with it. After much damage is done, Millions is finally ejected. The proprietor then scolds the chef, which results in the chef and his force quiting their jobs. Later the chef sees the proprietor make love to the cashier; the chef in a jealous rage sneaks into the kitchen and plants a bomb in the broiler and in his mad haste to get away he becomes locked in the kitchen, which results in an explosion blowing the chef, pots and pans in all directions.

THE CALL OF THE WAVES (Two Parts—Dec. 22).—Grace, a fisher girl, lives with her old father in a fishing village. She is an athletic care-free child of Nature, caring little for the conventions and foibles of society. Her greatest friend and companion is the sea, on the shores of which she has played from early childhood.

Frank, a young man of wealth and excellent parentage, stops at the village on one of his outing excursions and meets the charming child of Nature. The result is a mutual love affair. Frank well knows that he will meet with opposition from his testy old father when he informs him of his intentions of marrying the girl of his choice, but nevertheless, he returns to the city to try to secure the old man's consent to a match. Despite Frank's protestations of love, Grace feels she is not the equal of the man who would make her his wife.

Shortly after Frank left the village, a society woman and her effeminate son arrive. While out in a boat they have an accident and are upset. Grace, the child of the sea, saves their lives, and in gratitude they offer to take her back to the city. Grace decides to grasp her chance of gaining an education, and of becoming worthy of her lover. She accepts the lady's offer and goes to the city.

Frank, meanwhile, is much bored by the society life of his class and especially with the woman his father has chosen to be his wife.

Grace attends a reception with her benefactress and is exceedingly awkward, without realizing the fact herself. Frank, his father and the woman of his parent's choice, attend the function, but Frank fails to recognize his little sweetheart of the sea in her new surroundings, and even smiles covertly at her awkward mistake.

Grace sees the sneer and is broken-hearted. She begs the kind lady whose life she saved, to give her an education, determined to elevate herself in the eyes of her sweetheart until he cannot fail to recognize her as his equal. The lady sends her to Europe and she becomes a very accomplished young woman. Upon finishing her education, she makes an extended tour of Europe, ending her journey up at Monte Carlo, where she falls victim to the lure of the gambling table.

Meanwhile, Frank's father, thinking to cure his son of his mad infatuation, sends the young man to Europe. Frank takes to drink in his hopelessness and he, too, winds up in the gambling house of Monte Carlo. The two meet and recognize each other. Each of them feels unworthy of the other and seeks the comfort of solitude. The girl goes back to the sea, and as she sits on the rocks in the moonlight with the waves dashing about her, she is seen by her old sweetheart of the long ago. Again they meet and all doubts and fears are overcome in a true lover's embrace.

Watson, receives an invitation from Mr. Gregson, of Scotland Yard, to assist in unraveling a murder mystery. Holmes makes a careful study of the case and as a result of his ingenious deductions rounds up the murderer, one Jefferson Hope, a cabman.

The man confesses his guilt and tells his life-story and of the vengence of the many wrongs he has suffered at the hands of the dead man in the years gone by. Before the case comes to trial the prisoner dies from heart feailure. This is another victory for Holmes and his wonderful deductive methods, as the officers of Scotland Yard had all but fastened the guilt upon another and an innocent person.

BISON.

THE LAW OF THE RANGE (Three Parts—Dec. 26). In 1882 Tex Foster was known as the cattle king of the Cimarron range in New Mexico. Foster had grown up in the west and still pulled a ready gun on occasion. Age seemed not to have impaired his wonderful vitality nor dulled his keen brain. "Tex" brooked no opposition, and the cowman who crossed him eventually had cause to regret his independence. Either Foster picked a fight on some slight pretext or else hailed the offender up in court, where the judiciary, fearful of incurring the displeasure of one so rich, so powerful and so quick a trigger puller, generally returned a verdict satisfactory to "Tex." Foster inspired fear and respect but had no friends except those who wished to share in his prosperity. Mexicans hated him more than any other men on his range. The old cattle man felt supremely confident what would be encountered if only through fear of his vindictiveness, so that when Frank Smith, a small cowman, dared to protest at the enclosure of "free range" by Tex's cowboys, Foster sputtered more with astonishment than with rage. Smith knew what he was doing in opposing the old man, however, for cowmen generally muttered in secret at this latest of Foster's infringements upon their rights.

Rather than make a personal matter out of his attempts to fence up the "free range," however, Foster made much display of a letter purporting to come from the United States Land Commissioner at Washington. Smith retaliates by appealing to the local court but obtains little satisfaction. He openly denounces Foster, however, and is secretly backed by all the other small cowmen. Emily, Smith's wife, pleads with her husband not to pick a quarrel with Foster, knowing that Foster is the quicker gun man. Smith tries to calm her fears, but is in a quandary as to how to deal with the man who would despoil him of the ranch upon the development of which he has spent so many years.

Curley, Smith's foreman, suggests that they "rustle" Foster's cattle, but Smith does not like the idea. With little hope of being revenged upon Foster in any other way, however, Smith secretly considers his foreman's plan. A month after his first visit to the Smith ranch, Foster, true to his promise, comes again. This time when he endeavors to bluff Smith into selling his property, Smith orders him to vamose. Enraged by Foster's threat to get his property by hook or crook, Smith now falls in with Curley's plan and visits Charles Meadow's shack in the foothills, where he is persuaded to help steal Foster's stock. The band then began systematically rustling Foster's cattle.

Foster fails to discover his losses until Autumn, when he learns that Smith has had a large "increase" in calves while, on the other hand, he has had severe losses of stock. Foster accuses Smith of rustling. The small cowman denies the accusation with heat. Foster, unwilling to shoot Smith down appeals to a local court, and Smith and Curley are arrested. Smith's wife believes him innocent. While Curley and Smith are in jail a delegation of small cowmen visit them and assure them of their support. In furtherance of their plan to free Smith the small cowmen, who comprise three-fourths of the voters of the community, send the judge a letter reminding him that election time is near and that a decision favorable to Smith would be appreciated.

Smith learns that the case is "fixed," but fears that his sensitive eastern wife will learn that he is a cattle thief. When she visits him in his cell he is nervous and fretful.

The case is called and Foster accuses Smith of stealing his cattle. The old ranchman brings forward proofs which apparently cannot be contradicted. Smith draws his gun at the accusation and a shooting affray in the courtroom is narrowly averted. Taking advantage of a convenient technicality, the judge dismisses the case "for lack of sufficient evidence." Smith and Curley are carried out of the courtroom on the shoulders of the small cowmen, and the judge tries to restore order in his courtroom by shooting his .44 into the ceiling.

IN JUNGLE WILDS (Two Parts—Jan. 3).—Franz Kemper, his wife, his son, Paul, and a daughter, Mary, live on a farm in Africa. John Durke is Kemper's hired man. John and Mary are in love. Ludwig Von Baer, a naturalist, is Kemper's life-long friend. Kemper has long planned that his friend and Mary shall marry.

Von Baer arrives in Africa to study wild animal life in the jungle. En route the naturalist stops at the farm of his old friend. Kemper is overjoyed, and presents Mary, at the same time making plain to her that Von Baer is the man whom he has chosen for her husband. Mary loses no time in acquainting young Durke with her father's plans. Later, Von Baer sees that Mary loves Durke, and continues on his way into the jungle.

Five years elapse. John and Mary have married, and have a boy and a home of their own. Again Von Baer visits the Kemper farm and learns of Mary's marriage. Accompanied by Paul Kemper, as a guide, he sets out to visit the young couple. Mary's welcome is somewhat effusive. John witnesses the greeting, and permits his jealousy to get the better of his judgment. A scene results, and John takes his gun and stalks into the jungle. Von Baer and Paul bid Mary good-bye and return to the Kemper farm. Mary, angry at her husband, leaves a note for him, takes their child, and follows Von Baer and Paul. His anger cooled, John returns home, finds the note, and hastens after his wife and child.

Mary loses her way, and a prowling leopard stampedes her horse. Arriving at the Kemper farm, John fails to find his wife and child. Calling in neighboring settlers he shows them her note and the four men start out to search for the lost ones. Von Baer finds Mary and her child, rescues them from a lion, and brings them back safely to the house. John, ashamed of his suspicions, expresses his gratitude, apologizes to the innocent naturalist, and the story ends happily.

THE BARRIER OF FLAMES (Two Parts—Dec. 15).—The mayor refuses to sign certain franchise bills which he believes to be dishonest, and when, unexpectedly, the political boss finds in his hands the means of coercing his superior, he determines to make the most of his opportunity. Little Helen, Mayor Southwick's child, straying away from an automobile party, gets lost in the woods. She comes to the house where the boss holds his secret conferences, and he orders his housekeeper to keep guard over the child while he motors to the city. His plan is bills. Meanwhile, the housekeeper wanders away to hold the child until her father has signed the bills. Meanwhile the housekeeper wanders away to a neighbor's, leaving little Helen locked in an upper room. But the child's devoted collie, who misses her sorely, already is tracing her. "Shep" reaches the house just in time to rescue Helen. A fire has broken out while she is locked in alone. He alarms the firemen, climbs a ladder to Helen's room, and jumping through a skylight, leads the rubber-coats to where the child is. With little Helen safe, "Shep" leaps from the top story of the burning house into the fire net.

SID NEE'S FINISH (Dec. 20).—Sid Nee, a Chinese laundryman, is sought by officers of the law. He escapes to a small town where he opens a laundry. Kate Kelly, who takes in washing soon finds that Sid Nee has robbed her of her business. She determines to wreck his establishment, but this scheme being frustrated, she hits upon the still more profitable plan of going into partnership with the Chinaman. Meanwhile, the police have traced the fugitive. Kate's sweetheart, Mike Doolan, who believes that she is going to marry the Chinaman, leads the officers to the house of the Justice of the Peace, and when Kate and Sid Nee comes out with their document, the latter is grabbed and hauled away. Then Mike finds that what he had supposed was a marriage license is merely a business contract.

UNDER FALSE COLORS (Two Parts—Dec. 22).—Genevieve Watts, an heiress, weary of society life, remonstrates with her conventional aunt, declaring that within a year she will convince her that society is all sham. Several months later, Genevieve, who has gone into the country to sketch, meets a charming young girl, Mary Newel, whom she invites to spend a winter in New York. Genevieve buys Mary the most beautiful clothes, that the city affords, and introduces her to society as a mysterious princess driven to the United States by the war, where she is traveling incognita. Soon the young man with whom Genevieve is in love becomes infatuated with the supposed princess—and so before long the heiress exposes the fraud. Immediately all the world turns cold to Mary, who is glad to escape back to her country home and her own people. But Genevieve has proved her point.

PRINCESS.

IN THE CONSERVATORY (Dec. 11).—At a large dinner-dance given by Mrs. Ralph Schuyler, the hostess discovers that her pewels have been stolen. Suspicion points to the governess of her child, and the young woman is about to be arrested, when a well-dressed stranger comes forward, confesses to the theft, and produces the gems from his pocket. Another guest shows a police shield and, introducing himself as Sergeant Wilson, handcuffs the confessed thief and leads him away. On the street Wilson explains to his prisoner that he is himself a crook, whose game is to pose as a police-detective in order to help out other thieves. The next instant, the "prisoner" springs forward, handcuffs snap, and and Wilson finds that the tables have been turned. Blowing a police whistle, his captor summons help—and "Sergeant Wilson" learns that not only may thieves masquerade as detectives, but that detectives may also pose as thieves; and that by turning against him his own weapon, the cleverest detective in the city has drawn him into a trap.

WHEN FATE REBELLED (Jan. 1).—Tom Skyes, adopts a baby girl, one of twins, to solace his wife, who is heartbroken at the loss of her own child. At the same time a wealthy couple by the name of Gale adopt the other twin. A dozen years later finds Madeline, her foster-mother dead, the unwilling accomplice of Sykes, who has turned burglar—and Marion, a generous, openhanded child, loved by rich and poor in the community. Sykes enters the Gale home, and is shot and killed by Mr. Gale in self-defence. Madeline, meanwhile, at Skyes' orders, has been working in Marion's room. The shot awakes Marion, who, on seeing Madeline poorly clad, and looking wonderfully like her own photograph, is filled with sympathy for her unhappy double and invites her to share her bed for the night. In the morning, Mrs. Gale, on discovering two Marions in bed, cannot believe her senses—until her husband tells her about their little adopted daughter being a twin. Marion, too, learns that she has found her own twin sister—and, of course, after that the two girls never are separated.

RELIANCE.

OUR MUTUAL GIRL (Chapter 49—Dec. 21).—Margaret is presented to George Barr McCutcheon, who relates for her especial benefit some of the incidents he has happened across, which have provided material for his famous romances. Captain James Curtin is a United States cavalry officer stationed in New York City. He falls in love with a beautiul girl, who visits the grounds at headquarters, and a later meeting on Fith avenue convinces him that his feeling is reciprocated. They are prevented from coming to an understanding, however, by the interference of an elderly man, apparently the girl's father, who hurries her away. The captain's only clue is a small coin with which the supposed father has tipped a bell-boy. Curtin learns that it was minted in one of the Balkan states. He goes abroad and finds the kingdom whence the money came. There he learns that the girl is Princess Olga and the elderly man, Prime Minister to the King, her father. The Prime Minister is at the head of a conspiracy to usurp the throne. Meanwhile, the Princess and the Prime Minister have returned from the United States and the conspirators,

TWO KISSES (Dec. 19).—"Two Kisses" is being sung and whistled by everybody when a young fellow from the country gets a position as clerk in a music store. In the part of the world from which Jed Blinks has come, "There'll be a Hot Time in the Old Town To-night" is still the favorite air; and when two attractive young ladies walk into the store and ask for "Two Kisses," Jed promptly accommodates them, much to their consternation. This is only the beginning of many complications, all springing out of the country youth's ignorance of the popular ballad. The proprietor of the store and Jed are treated to a rough lesson by a mob of insulted customers.

THE SILENT WAY (Dec. 16)—Della Clark goes West for her health, and is warmly welcomed by cousins in Colorado. However, she overlooks the main thing—life in the open—and two months later finds her condition worse. She is on the point of going back East when a young Indian, a graduate of Carlisle, determines to take matters into his own hands. Realizing that it will be a waste of time to try to persuade the white girl, brought up in a large Eastern city, to live the sort of life she should, in order to get thoroughly well, he resorts to "the silent way" of the Indian. He has some of his tribe abduct Miss Clark. For eight months she is obliged to stay among the Indians and to adapt herself to their methods of life. At the end of eight months her cousins, who have been searching for her far and near, are overjoyed by Della's safe return—and by the miraculous fact of her complete cure.

THE SOWER REAPS (Two parts, Dec. 21).—On the occasion of the killing, in an accidental encounter, of Miser Pike by Peter Pelham, the district attorney, who for years has been hounded by the sinister old man, the latter manages to divert suspicion to Ben Rolfe, the schoolmaster and his political rival, also involving Rolfe's worthless brother, Tim, in the affair. Ben, to shield Tim, who recently has robbed the miser of his hoard and therefore appears guilty, does not deny the charge Pelham has put upon him—though he escapes to another town. Tim is arrested by order of the district attorney, and a posse is sent after Ben, who is found and taken into custody by the sheriff. Meanwhile, Pelham has contrived to find in Pike's house certain incriminating papers, which for years the miser has held against him and used as a threat. He tells Laurel, Pike's daughter, that the papers will convict Ben Rolfe, whom she loves. The next day, however, at the inquest, the evidence being sifted thoroughly, Pelham breaks down and confesses.

BEAUTY.

HER YOUNGER SISTER (Dec. 15).—John Wynn loves Emma Lyons, and when she accepts him, he goes to get the consent of Bill Lyons, her father. Lyons, being a selfish old soul, determines to keep his eldest daughter to wait upon him. So he tells John to come back in ten years with a "stake" and he can have Emma. Wynn tries to persuade Emma to marry him in spite of her father, but she, with her strong sentiment of filial duty, refuses. By the time John returns, Elsie Lyons, whom he knew previously as a pretty child of ten, has grown to be a very attractive young woman. He mistakes her for Emma—and is obviously disappointed when he meets once more the elder sister, with whom the years have not stood still. Emma realizes that Elsie unconsciously has usurped her place, and, accustomed all her life to self-sacrifice, she breaks the engagement, which for ten years has been the one bright spot in her sober round of duties.

BRASS BUTTONS (Dec. 22).—Owen O'Neal and Jim Gallagher are rivals for the affections of Mary McArthur. Seeing that Owen plainly is cutting him out, Jim borrows the uniform of a policeman friend, and presents himself to Mary as having been newly elected to the force. She is dazzled by his brass buttons, and Owen takes his sorrows to a sympathetic fireman, who suggests that he put on a spare coat and cap of his and pose as one of the department. Both young men, in their borrowed finery, meet at Mary's house. Jim happens to get hold of Owen's cap and reads inside, "Tom Baily, Hook and Ladder 33." A little later Owen picks up Jim's helmet and sees, "Hugh Patterson, East Side Station." Jim exposes Owen first. On Mary's insistent demand that he arrest the sham fireman on the spot, however, Jim is up against it. But there is nothing for it except that he shall march Owen to the police station Mary accompanying them. There, of course, the sergeant hands over Jim, charged with "impersonating an officer." Owen tells Mary that he has put on the fireman's uniform only to catch Jim in a trap and show up his deception. Then Mary decides the rivalry forever by giving her promise to Owen.

KOMIC.

A FLURRY IN ART (Jan. 24).—Gillespie, a multi-millionaire, has Harry Gregg, a penniless young painter, come to his home to do a portrait of his daughter, Maisie. The result is that Maisie and the painter fell in love. Harry bravely asks the father for her hand and old Gillespie promptly orders him out of the house forever. Harry goes home and decides to auction off his studio effects and pictures and leave the city. That night two thieves break into the millionaire's home and steal the Gillespie diamond necklace, a very valuable heirloom. The alarm is given and one of the thieves, thinking he is to be caught, slips the necklace between the frame and canvas of Maisie's portrait. Both thieves, however, escape.

The next morning Gillespie, in an extra fit of anger over his misfortunes, orders Masie's picture to be returned to Gregg at once. Confederates of the thieves see the removal of the picture to Harry's studio. The two thieves have had a fight over the affair and each one sets out separately to the studio to get the picture. When they arrive the auction is on and poor Harry's first picture has just been knocked down for one dollar and ninety cents. Harry has left the room in despair. The auctioneer next puts up Maisie's portrait and the two thieves begin to bid against each other. When the bidding reaches four and five hundred dollars the public present begins to sit up and take notice. Bidding becomes general and soon the room is crowded to the doors with people wildly bidding for the picture. The portrait is knocked down to one of the thieves. Harry comes in and finds out that Maisie's portrait has been sold. He tells the auctioneer that it was not for sale and starts out after the purchaser. Meanwhile the high bidding started by the two thieves has "caught on" and people are wildly bidding on the next picture.

Harry meets the thief in the hall and asks for the picture to be returned, saying that its sale was a mistake. The thief argues a moment, then seeing that Harry is deadly in earnest, he starts to run. Harry runs after him. They grapple over the picture. A fight ensues. The other thief, angry at his accomplice for getting away with the picture, telephones Gillespie that the necklace was in his daughter's portrait. Gillespie and Maisie get in an automobile and start for the studio. They arrive in an awful jam of people. Gillespie makes his way to the auctioneer and learns that the picture has been sold. He tells Maisie, adding that that is the kind of a lover he was, selling her portrait to the first buyer. Maisie is heartbroken. Just then a shot is heard. Everyone runs out. They find Harry lying in a pool of blood in the basement, but with Maisie's portrait in his arms. Explanations are made, the necklace is recovered, and Gillespie and Maisie help Harry to his feet. Just then the auctioneer comes up with a hat full of money received from the auction, which, except for the thieves, would have been a dismal failure. The money has a proper effect on father's feelings, and he gives Maisie and Harry his blessing.

ZUDORA (Episode 5—"The Case of the Perpetual Glare"—Reels 9 and 10—Two Parts—Dec. 5).—The secret room in the house of Hassam Ali, is the opening scene in "The Case of the Perpetual Glare," the fifth episode of Zudora. The mystic sits in reverie before the crystal ball, when into the secret room glides his Hindu servant. He speaks to his master, then leaves, but only to return again and ushers in two white-haired old men. They hold an earnest conversation with Hassam Ali, and presently Zudora is summoned. She kneels beside her uncle and he slips an arm around her.

"We are hunting a stone of matchless brilliancy, my dear," he says to her. "Some new Koh-I-Nor that will catch light up, concentrate it, and throw it like a burning shaft in whatever direction we wish. There is some such stone around because we have seen this phenomenon of light throwing, and are anxious to find the source of it. We believe that it could have originated in nothing but a wonderful diamond."

Zudora, unaware of the fact that this is only another attempt of her uncle's to trick her, readily consents to attempt the search. All she thinks of is that he has promised his consent to her marriage with John Storm, the young lawyer whom she has learned to love, if she solves twenty cases brought to him in his capacity as a mystic detective. She has already solved four cases. Here, then, is her opportunity to explain a fifth and count one more step toward the goal of her hopes. She sets out happily, and, going to the cabin of the aged twins, which is situated at the top of a bare hill, she talks with them. They tell her that this jewel has the strength and potency of an eternal fire, and with that bit of information to comfort her she goes down the hill again.

As she walks along, the card she holds in her hand catches fire. Alarmed, she looks around her. Soon a magazine she is carrying also bursts into flames. Smoke rises from her hat. Everywhere she goes, fire seems to follow her. In desperation she runs wildly across a nearby field where her lover, John Storm, is waiting. As they are hurrying along, a farmer, driving a load of hay, catches up with them and offers them a lift which they gladly accept. They are no more than safely seated on the comfortable hay, however, when it catches fire, and bewildered and frightened, they and the farmer leap from the wagon for their lives.

The picture changes, and the two old men are alternately rubbing their hands together gleefully or staring through a telescope. Soon Hassam Ali joins them. He too, seems delighted by what he sees through the long, brass-covered instrument, and together the three go back to the dilapidated cabin on the hilltop. There, presently, Storm comes with Zudora. They are attacked by the twins and, while they are being securely tied. Hassam Ali, who has been in hiding, departs without being seen and goes home. When the twins come to him there to be paid for what they had been led to believe was only an attempt to frighten a disobedient girl, Hassam Ali suddenly makes known to them his nefarious schemes for doing away with Storm and Zudora. They refuse his overtures to aid in this attempt, and leave. Their machine, that wonderful invention with which they produce the perpetual glare and with which they hope to startle the world, is not to be turned into a weapon for murder, so they tell Hassam Ali.

In a rage with them, Hassam Ali stalks up the street to see what he can do alone. He collects a gang of ruffians on the way and with them succeeds in planting dynamite in the hill where the twins have their cabin. When this is done and a fuse has been run to the bottom of the hill he sends for the twins, for at the last moment he has decided to spare their lives. They crouch, cowering by the mystic as he touches a match to the fuse.

Meanwhile John Storm has struggled free of the ropes that bind him and loosed Zudora. She hastens away, but fearing some catastrophe, hurries back and high on the hill sees her lover smashing that strange arrangement of cylindrical mirrors and magnifying glasses which has produced the mysterious glare. She stops never a second to examine this strange affair, but suspecting from the looks of the workmen she has seen on her way, that something portends, climbs up and seizes Storm and hurries down the hill again. They reach safety just as the dynamite flings the hill high in the air.

THE TRUTH WAGON (Masterpiece).—The story opens with a ball at the residence of George Ross, Republican candidate for governor. When the activity of the evening is at its height the men are not to be found. The women become the victims of disagreeable lassitude. The ball is a failure.

In the meantime the men are the guests of John Ross, the practical joker. They deserted the allurements of the ball room to attend an amateur prizefight held on a barge, young Ross' newest idea.

When John Ross returns home, "four sheets in the wind" and piloting Jim, the victor of the fight, his reception by his family is not what might be termed friendly. They are weary of his pranks and one after another deliver the broadside, "Why don't you tell the truth and go to work."

George Ross, his father, is in no sense dishonest but is a pliant tool in the hands of Henry Drew, Republican State Chairman. Drew comes to an understanding with Francis Sullivan, the Democratic power in the state, to the effect that the Democratic votes will be cast for Ross and that in payment for this, political favors will be handed out to Sullivan. George Ross, however, is ignorant that he is being used as a tool. Neither will he believe his son, who tells him that he is being used as a plaything.

Helen Dean, a reporter on "Truth," a fast-dying newspaper owned by William Dean, her father, seeks out John Ross to get a story concerning his newest joke. Like those of his family, she is impressed by his idleness and asks him why he does not tell the truth and go to work. He takes up a copy of "Truth" which she has laid upon the table and gets an idea. He learns that the newspaper is for sale and a moment later when his father takes him to task for his uselessness, he makes the startling announcement: "I'm going on the Truth Wagon for ninety days. I'm going to buy the 'Truth' and go to work."

And he does. He buys the newspaper and begins to wage a bitter war against crooked politics. He refuses to sell out to Tammany and when his father will not cut loose from Drew and Sullivan, he begins to fight him. He retains Helen Dean and her father to aid him in his campaign and goes so far as to have the elder Dean nominated for the governorship to run against his father. Sullivan brings libel suits against young Ross and holds him practically a prisoner in his office. When these means fail and when John Ross succeeds in getting incriminating evidence against Sullivan and Drew, Sulivan gets his strong-arm-men together and instructs them to stop the "Truth" from going to press if they have to wreck the plant to do it. Young Ross appeals to the police for protection but they have already been "fixed" by the shrewd Sullivan.

It is then that John Ross takes the law into his own hands. He finds Jim, his amateur prize-fighting friend. Jim gathers his henchmen together and they invade the Truth office, which is now in the hands of Sullivan's strong-arm men. A rough-and-tumble fight ensues between the two factions which results in the defeat of the Sullivan gang.

In the meantime Forbes, a reporter on Truth, has sold out to the Star, Sullivan's newspaper, and has furnished them with a slanderous story regarding young Ross and Helen Dean. Sullivan considers this the blow which will defeat Ross. He offers to trade this story for the evidence held by Ross which will convict him. John Ross consents but he still holds the joker up his sleeve. He has summoned his father, George Ross, and showed him the evidences of Sullivan's and Drew's conspiracy against him. Thus enlightened the elder Ross resigns from the gubernatorial race in favor of William Dean and gives his son an exclusive story of his action. This is a body-blow to Sullivan and routs him completely. As a recompense for the loss of the money he has invested in the newspaper and the loss of the newspaper plant itself, John wins the hand of Helen Dean, now daughter of the governor-elect.

ECLECTIC.

PERILS OF PAULINE (Twentieth and Last Episode—Two Parts—Dec.).—Having seen the futility of his plans, the wreck of one villainous scheme after another and his utter failure to secure the result he is looking for through the aid of various unscrupulous assistants, Owen finally decides to git rid of Pauline by his own efforts.

While the three are taking a pleasure trip on the Marvin yacht, Pauline begs Harry to teach her to run the motorboat which is taken along as a tender. He consents and before long the girl considers herself competent to run the boat unattended.

It happens that at this time the U. S. Naval Department purchases an old barge to be used as a target in gun practice. This barge is towed out to sea and then anchored barely out of sight of the Marvin yacht.

That night Pauline, very proud of her newly acquired knowledge of running a motorboat, determines to take a trip in it on the morrow by herself. Harry protests against her folly, but as usual she insists upon having her own way. Owen overhears the conversation and determines to profit by it. Favored by the darkness he gets into the motor boat and bores a hole in the bottom which he partially stops up with cotton waste in order to make a slow leak. But Nemesis, in the person of an old sailor, is at hand. Owen's actions are seen by this man who then visits the motorboat and learns what has been done to it. But for the time being he holds his peace.

The next morning Pauline, with her dog under her arm, starts off on her motorboat trip. Harry protests to the last, but is laughed down by Pauline who chugs away triumphant in the boat. As Harry turns away in anger the sailor steps up to Owen, and leads his aside and then asks him why he scuttled the boat the night before. Owen, in terror at the knowledge of his guilt bribes him to be silent.

An hour later Pauline discovers the leak and tries in vain to stop it. The water comes in faster and faster and before long the girl sees that she must make a landing very soon, or drown. Spying the old barge, she drives her waterlogged boat to it at top speed and reaches it just in time. Carrying her dog with her, she clambers up the forechains and makes herself as comfortable in the cabin as she can. But she is saved from one danger only to be plunged into another. Suddenly a shell passes through the cabin with terrific noise. The battleship is firing at its target and Pauline is caught like a rat in a trap. Another shell hits the vessel and then another. Conscious that it can only be a question of a few minutes before the boat will be utterly destroyed, Pauline hastily writes a note on a scrap of paper telling of her peril, and then tying it to her dog's collar, points out to him the warship and throws him into the water. The intelligent beast successfully performs his mission, swims to the battleship, is picked up by the sailors and before long Pauline is rescued just as the barge is sinking.

Meantime the old sailer demands $50,000 from Owen as the price of his silence. Owen rendered desperate by the fear of betrayal, tries to push the man into the water, catching him at an unguarded moment. But the sailor, seizing Owen, hurls him into the water.

Later Pauline is brought back by the bluejackets to the yacht and receives a loving welcome from Harry. Owen, who has been struggling vainly to keep afloat, with a last despairing cry, sinks unnoticed, unwept and unregretted. To such an end does his unscrupulous avariciousness bring him.

WHEN WEALTH ASPIRED (Three Parts—Dec.).—Paola Donnetti, a charming and attractive young girl, is the daughter of wealthy, though uncultured parents. Being desirous of having a titled son-in-law, they negotiate with a martimonial agent to learn the name of some eligible member of the nobility. The agent recommends a certain Duke de Rondoza, a ruined nobleman. The parents of Paola are greatly impressed by the Duke and gladly consent to his becoming her fiance. An agreement is drawn up between the Duke and the matrimonial agent, wherein the former promises to pay 60,000 francs one month after the ceremony takes place as commission for arranging the marriage. Robert Santello, Donnetti's secretary, who is in love with Paola, finds the agreement and angrily protests to her father. He is told that it is no concern of his and is ordered from the room. Fearful lest Paola should learn of the motive for her engagement, Donnetti sends the secretary to the Duke with a note explaining the matter and asking for advice. The Duke demands the agreement from the secretary, and on being refused, strikes him across the face. The secretary promptly challenges the Duke which is exactly what he desires, being a skillful duellist. The secretary returns home and writes a note to Paola which he places in an envelope with the request written thereon that it shall be given to her in the event of his death. This note he places in his desk and goes to the place selected for the duel. The seconds place the combatants back to back, instructing them to walk ten paces, turn and fire. The secretary falls mortally wounded and is carried to his home. With his dying breath, he attempts to tell his mother of the note but it remains undiscovered.

The wedding takes place, but Paola sighs for Robert, her old lover. His mother, chancing to open his desk soon after, finds the note written to Paola which she hastens to deliver. Paola is horrified to learn from its contents that she has been sold for a title by her parents. She registers a deep hatred for her husband, the Duke, and vows to avenge her lover.

Prince Renucci, an old friend of Duke de Rondoza, pays him a visit. The Prince, like the Duke, is an accomplished swordsman and they engage in a friendly match. The Prince thrice disarms the Duke. Paola notes the Prince's superiority and determines to use him as a means for her vengeance. The Prince becomes enamored with Paola and secretly pleads his love. She encourages him and soon has the satisfaction of arousing her husband's jealousy. The Duke challenges the Prince to mortal combat. The two noblemen repair to the field of honor and defiantly face one another. With clashing swords the combatants fight for the mastery. The Prince, however, with a deft stroke, evades the Duke's guard and stretches him, wounded, at his feet. Realizing the seriousness of the wound, Paola is summoned to his side. With accusing looks, the Duke asks her to explain the reasons for her actions with the Prince. She silently hands him the tell-tale agreement sent to her by the secretary. The Duke then realizes that his motive for marrying Paola is known to her and attempts to rise and plead with her. But the effort proves too much for him and he sinks to the floor, where death soon exacts the toll for his selfish desires.

THE STAR OF GENIUS (Pathe—Three Parts—Dec.).—The famous French star, M'lle. Napierkowska, is featured in this story of the stage, its successes and failures.

The young composer, Hulburt, with mingled feelings awaits the day of the first rehearsal of his opera "La Tolosa." Critics and reviewers in the shoals are present to witness it and Hurlburt knows the importance of their verdict. Unfortunately for him the standard of merit demanded by them is not found in the opera and blasted in hope and ambition he leaves the theater.

On his way home he encounters a poor young flower girl who has just been robbed by hoodlums. Taking pity on her he brings her to his home and gives her food and shelter. To his surprise he finds that she has a remarkable native talent for dancing and determines to make use of it in his next opera and in the meantime to be her benefactor.

Some time later, filled with confidence both in his protege, Valerie, and in the merits of his new production, Hurlburt directs the dress rehearsal of "Caius Caligula." Quite the reverse of that of "La Tolosa" is the reception awarded to this opera. The beauty, grace and talent of Valerie united with the excellence of the music takes the audience by storm, and author and girl receive the plaudits of the critics. The Vicomte d'Arcel, who has met Valerie before, seizes the opportunity to declare his love to the girl who admits that she does not view him with indifference. Later when Hurlburt looks for her to take her home, he sees her drive off with the young nobleman.

The next day he is overwhelmed to receive a letter from her telling him that because of the deep love which she feels for d'Arcel, she is impelled to leave the hospitality of his house.

Months later Valerie learns that d'Arcel will not marry her because of the objections of his parents, and decides to leave the cast of "Caius Caligula" and seek a change of employment. Despite her defection the play continues with brilliant success and Hurlburt is begged by the theater owner for the privilege of presenting his next opera.

Heartsick at the loss of the girl whose benefactor he has been and who has done so much to insure the success of "Caius Caligula," Hurlburt feels the importance of securing her for his new opera. He learns from a friend that she has secured an engagement with another and will make her debut shortly. Finding that the accompanist of that theater is ill he applies for and receives that position for the dress rehearsal.

So on that fateful night the man and the girl he loves are thrown together again in a dramatic scene. What happens is better left to the imagination. We will say this, however, it is both satisfactory and artistic.

THE SECRET OF THE MOUNTAIN (Pathe—Four Parts—Dec.).—Wealthy Farmer Rodel decides that his son, Julian, should enjoy the fruits of his labor and sends him to the city to be educated. Unfortunately the new environment has a bad effect on him and he falls under the influences of fast comrades. Being liberally suplied with funds by his doting parent, Julian indulges in every fancy. He meets a charming young girl, Helene, and lavishes every attention upon her, thereby cultivating in her a desire for expensive pastimes. The old man has confidence in Julian and when he receives a letter from his attorney advising him of Julian's extravagances, it makes no impression on him.

Julian increases his pace but soon realizes that he must again draw on his indulgent father. Being in urgent need of funds, he motors to the farm. Entering the house, he sees a note from his father's attorney advising that Julian has frittered away all the available funds leaving the estate in a precarious condition. Stunned by the knowledge that he has caused his father's ruin, Julian returns to the city only to learn that Helene has deserted him. Searching through his papers, Julian picks up his life insurance policy which suggests a way for him to make reparation to his father.

He joins an excursion which goes on an expedition to the nearby mountains. Reaching the summit, the party prepares for lunch. Julian, however, strays off and reaches the edge of a seemingly fathomless ravine. Believing that the insurance company will pay his father the amount of his policy, Julian decides to throw himself into the ravine and make it appear accidental. Leaving his gloves on the rocks nearby, thereby giving a clue to his tragic death, Julian casts himself into the depth below. But fate decrees that Julian should miraculously escape the terrible end he planned, and he lands bruised and bleeding on an abutting ledge. Getting painfully to his feet, he realizes that his suicidal attempt has failed and that he must now feign death in order to carry out his plans. He places his hat on the edge of the ledge and makes his way to the base off the mountain where he is taken in by a laborer who binds up his wounds. Julian decides to leave the country as soon as he recovers. Without inquiring as to the financial condition of his aged father, he goes to South Africa.

Meanwhile, a careful search is made for Julian by the other excursionists which of course proves futile. The sad news of his death is carried to his father, who has gone to the city to make inquiries for him. Broken in spirit, the old man returns to the farm. Pressed by his impatient creditors, Julian's father is forced to sell his home and once more sets out to build his fortune. But time has robbed him of his strength and after many vain attempts to secure work, he becomes a rag picker and frequents the city dumps. He is found by a party returning from a carnival, who take him protesting to their banquet table. There he is surprised to find the girl whom he blames for his son's downfall. She is stricken with remorse when she realizes the depth of the old man's poverty and determines to rectify her error. She takes the faltering farmer to her home and there tends him day after day, depending on her frugal salary to supply their wants.

After several years Julian returns from the Transvaal, where he has amassed a fortune and goes to the farm to ask for his father's forgiveness. But sad is his homecoming when he learns of his parent's fate. Diligent searching through the large city, he finally locates the feeble old man and his faithful protector, Helene. With a heart full of forgiveness and gratitude for the safe return of his boy, the aged farmer folds his prodigal son to his breast. It is then that Julian recognizes the true worth of his former sweetheart, whom he vows will never again have cause to leave him.

SUGAR MAKING, CUBA (Pathe-Dec.).—All sides of the sugar making industry, from the cutting of the growing cane to the point where the sugar in bags is shipped to foreign countries.

THE BOMB BOY (Three Parts—Dec.).—Without exception this is one of the best offerings of the season. The remarkable acting by Ernest Truex, the delicious humor of the story, the thrills and the rapid action all combine to justify the word "immense" in connection with it.

Larry, the telegraph messenger boy, loves little Mame and his attentions meet with favor from the girl until Terry Turk, the light-weight pugilistic champion of Jersey City, steps in. Dazzled by the attentions of this great man Mame cannot see Larry at all, and accepts the present of a bracelet from the pugilist. Unable to compete with such great wealth, the messenger can only hope for something to turn up which will put a few dollars into his pockets.

The Grand Duke Sergius visits the United States and is followed by Anna Karensky, a nihilist, who is plotting his death. The Secret Service being warned of her presence aboard a certain steamship, the police wait for her arrival in order to arrest her. Her confederates in America learn of her danger and a warning is sent to her at the pier to get rid of the bomb at all hazards. The messenger chosen to deliver the message is our friend Larry. The nihilist manages to secrete the bomb in a hat box and to thus get it by the customs officials. She then gives the dangerous bundle to Larry with orders to deliver it to her confederates.

Through his ignorance of the contents of the box the boy subjects it to indignities calculated to make one's hair stand on end. He fulfills his mission and then, through eavesdropping, learns that he has been carrying a bomb. Climbing up a fire-escape he manages to secrete himself in the nihilists' headquarters and overhears enough conversation to inform him that the bomb is set for seven o'clock and that one of the nihilists, Ravelli, is a waiter in the duke's hotel and that he is to be responsible for the proper placing of the bomb.

Larry is discovered in his hiding place after Ravelli's departure, but succeeds in making his escape. He sets out in hot pursuit of the waiter, but is cleverly eluded. Larry then goes to the Duke's hotel and earnestly tries to see him and warn him but is not permitted to get by the barrier of servants. Finally at only five minutes to seven he succeeds in slipping by and breaking into the duke's apartments, finds him enjoying a tete-a-tete supper with a woman friend. Larry then starts a wild hunt for the bomb to the utter amazement of every one. Finally he finds the bomb in a covered dish and, charging wildly through the gathering crowd, dashes down stairs and across the street into a park. He has only a moment to spare. Hurling the bomb from him as far as he can, he jumps into the lake to escape the explosion. It comes, all right, but injures no one, thanks to the boy's resourcefulness.

The dripping boy is proclaimed a hero, and the delighted duke, not only fills his pockets with money, but, taking from his own shoulders the glittering cordon of the Legion of Honor, places it around the messenger's neck.

Meantime Mame has found that Terry's attentions amount to but little and longs for her telegraph boy again. Her longing is increased when she learns of the honors he has gained, but they only seem to make him the more inaccessible. But "Love will find a way," and before long we see the happy Mame wearing the ribbon of the Legion of Honor, and the telegraph boy come into his own again.

WHIFFLES MISSES MRS. WHIFFLES (Dec.).—Whiffles being particularly fond of his "better half," and possessing an exceptionally jealous disposition, strenuously objects to any member of his own sex paying the least attention to her. His jealousy is so unreasoning, that one day while he is entertaining a friend at his house, he resents the attentions paid his wife. This little episode so stirs him up that when shortly afterwards a shoe salesman calls at the house and persuades his wife to try on some shoes, the foolish husband seizes him by the slack of the trousers and throws him, shoes and all into the street. Nor will he listen to his wife's explanation, but threatens to slay the disturbers of his happiness.

It so happens that the friend who started his unhappy train of thought has forgotten his gloves and returns for them. Whiffles enters the room and finds him there with his wife. There is almost a tragedy, but wife and friend decide to teach him a lesson, which proves to be thoroughly effectual.

ALGERIAN NOMADS (On the Same Reel).—Close up views of some savage but picturesque looking people of the desert and oasis, showing their small industries and methods of living.

SOME SPRING BLOSSOMS (On the Same Reel).—The unfolding of some springtime buds into the full blown beautiful flowers is here shown in all the colors of nature.

THE RED SCAR OF COURAGE (Two Parts—Dec.).—This is a story of a man who, to win the girl whom he loved, was willing to become a soldier and thus in the course of duty became a hero. Arturo Remenyi is in love with Petrina Baldeni, the daughter of a distinguished general, and sister of his friend Baldeni, but the old general does not approve of his suit. Imbued as he is with the traditions of the army, he fails to see that there can be any career equally honorable, and so he informs Arturo that he wishes his daughter to marry a soldier only.

War breaks out in Tripoli, and Lieut. Baldeni is ordered to the front. Going to Arturo he tells him the news and suggests that now is the time for him to go to the front, and thus win Petrina. No sooner is the suggestion made than Arturo acts upon it. He at once enlists as a private, and is ordered to Tripoli, where he has the good fortune to serve in the company of his friend.

The regiment at once gets into action and in a short time is the focus of a hot fire from the enemy. A charge is ordered and soon the Arabs are flying in utter rout. Lieut. Baldeni is severely wounded, and is about to be dispatched by an Arab when Arturo throws himself between the two and receives on his own head the blow intended for his friend. For this gallant deed he is decorated by the commanding general. Later he returns to Italy heralded by the press as a hero, but disfigured for life by a huge scar. Writing Petrina he tells her that he is disfigured and so begs her to forget him. But she answers that the most terrible scar cannot disfigure a hero and that she awaits him.

A STORM ON THE WELSH COAST (Scenic).—A beautiful series of views of the ocean in one of its stormy moods. A picture that is sure to please.

A CHRISTMAS CAROL (Cosmofotofilm—Dec.).—Old Scrooge is a miser. The timid Christmas greeting of his old-ill-paid clerk, Bob Cratchit, exasperates him; the cheery urchins who assemble to sing a carol outside his window are driven off with threats and imprecations; and when his nephew, accompanied by his young wife, comes to press him to join them at their Christmas dinner, he greets them with black looks and bitter words. Later in the day Scrooge's ire is further increased by a visit from two benevolent gentlemen, who solicit from him in vain a small subscription for the poor.

Evening comes at last. Bob Cratchit hurries off to his humble home, where his wife and merry children eagerly await him, happy in the preparation of such Christmas cheer as their small means can afford. Meanwhile Scrooge has also reached his door. His eyes are suddenly attracted to the knocker. A curious change has come over it. What he sees is not a knocker at all, but the ghastly, yet living face of old Marley, his seven-years-dead partner. While Scrooge gazes the vision fades—the knocker is once more in its place, and Scrooge, trying to persuade himself that his eyes have played him a trick, enters the dismal house. Having reached his own room in safety, he fastens the door, gets into his dressing-gown and proceeds to warm his gruel over a miserable fire. Suddenly a small bell in his room begins to swing softly to and fro, he hears strange sounds upon the staircase, and the ghost of Marley enters through the closed door.

The ghost calls the horrified Scrooge's attention to the heavy chain it drags after it, and Scrooge sees it is composed of ledgers, cash-boxes, deeds, etc. The ghost then warns him that he also, by his miserly habits, is forging a similar chain for himself, and urges him to change his manner of life while there is yet time. He tells Scrooge that he will shortly be visited by three spirits, counsels him to profit by what they will reveal to him, and departs.

Worn out with terror and emotion, Scrooge throws himself upon his bed and falls asleep Presently the ghost of Christmas Past enters He commands, and the spirit of Scrooge, leaving his body still slumbering on the bed, arises and follows him down the stairs and out into the snowy streets. The spirit leads him to a lonely country schoolhouse. The scholars have left for their holidays, the dreary schoolroom is deserted by all, save by one solitary boy who, neglected by his friends, has been left to spend his Christmas there alone. Scrooge recognizes in the lonely child his own young self and weeps.

The spirit next leads Scrooge to the house of his genial old employer, Mr. Fezziwig. A Christmas dance is going on, and Scrooge sees himself as a young man joining heartily in the festivities. He would gladly linger, but the ghost of Christmas Past hurries him away. Scrooge's spirit re-enters his slumbering body, but is soon called forth again by the ghost of Christmas Present. This time the spirit leads him to his nephew's house. A merry party is gathered together, and Scrooge's nephew proposes "a toast to Mr. Scrooge," in which he makes the whole company join. Scrooge's face beams with pleasure—he would gladly pledge the company in return, but he is once more hurried off.

He is next visited by the ghost of Christmas Yet-to-Come, a mysterious veiled figure, who leads him to a lonely churchyard and shows him his own neglected grave. Scrooge, with terror and remorse, falls upon his knees and begs the spirit to grant him one more chance.

At this moment he awakes. To his great joy and relief he realizes that it is Christmas morning, that he is still alive; still has time before him in which to make amends. He falls upon his knees and prays for forgiveness and help. Then he dresses and hastens into the street. Then he hurries on to the market, where he selects that largest turkey in the store and orders it to be taken to Bob Cratchit's house with Mr. Scrooge's compliments.

The next morning old Scrooge, now as light-hearted as a boy, hurries to his office, eager to play a trick upon his old clerk. He terrifies Bob, who comes in a few minutes later, by pretending that he is about to dismiss him; then, suddenly changing his tone, he digs the poor old fellow in the ribs and tells him his salary is doubled.

The picture ends with a glimpse of a Christmas Yet-to-Come, in which Scrooge, happy and beloved by all, is seen seated in the midst of the Cratchit family with Tiny Tim, Bob's crippled son, in his arms.

THE TWO COLUMBINES (Cosmofotofilm—Dec.).—It is Christmas Eve, and before starting out for her night's work, the theater-cleaner takes her little girl on her knee and tells of another Christmas Eve, years ago. In those days the theater-cleaner was a young and pretty Columbine (pantomime actress). The gay, old-fashioned pantomime ran smoothly to its end and then, as Columbine was daintily perched aloft for the last tableau, there was a flutter and a cry and Columbine had fallen heavily to the stage. A doctor was summoned from the audience, but Columbine's ankle was badly broken and the doctor pronounced her dancing days over. Since then poverty and hardship have brought the theater-cleaner to her present humble task, and her limping gait is the only evidence left of her brilliant nights as Columbine. She brushes the recollections aside, kisses her child and sets off. At the theater the dancers, Columbine, Harlequin, all the gay crowd, stab her afresh with memories of her own brief hours before the footlights. She turns to her work with a heavy heart.

The performance ends in a shower of congratulations for the new Columbine. At the

DO IT WITH A THEATRE RECORD LEDGER

If you intend running your theatre in a business and systematic way and get every cent there is in it out, you simply cannot get along without my Theatre Record Ledger. If you could see a Theatre Record Ledger there would be nothing to it. You would buy without a moment's delay. Already my ledger is in daily use in over 1500 theatres in America. There's a reason. The Theatre Record Ledger is the only theatre bookkeeping ledger that absolutely gives you every detail. You can not only record every matinee from night performance, but priced tickets as well. Also a complete record of every disbursement for expenses. Spacing is also left for names of features and acts. Each sheet represents a week. 52 pages comprise the full ledger. You can keep a whole year's business under one cover. Everything from the very cent you take in and spend to the film you use. Now's the time to start the new year.

Gundlach Projection Lenses have replaced other lenses of all kinds in several thousand theatres.

Hard headed managers of big theatre circuits have ordered one lens for trial and then equipped every machine they have in use with these lenses. This is where many of our big orders come from.

It is just as important for the small theatre with one machine to get a perfect picture and a better picture will sometimes make a big difference in the profits. Don't get this idea that your picture is good enough because it is not so long as it can be improved.

REMEMBER: Gundlach Projection Lenses are always sold subject to approval by all dealers in theatre supplies and direct.

door of her dressing room, one of her fellow actors compliments her, tapping her cheeks familiarly. Just then Harlequin appears, resents the familiarity with his sweetheart, and a quarrel ensues, from which Columbine and Harlequin emerge sadly estranged. Harlequin cannot keep his anger long, but pride prevents him from going to Columbine's room and making peace. Instead, he waits outside the stage door in the street. Columbine is deloyed, however. She has gone to Harlequin's room to end the quarrel, finds it empty, but sees Harlequin's costume—sadly in need of timely stitches —lying on a chair. Long after theater has emptied she is busy over her task.

Meantime the theater-cleaner has gone hurrying home, glowing at the thought of a scheme she has just conceived for brightening her child's Christmas. She will take her child to the deserted theater and show her the wonderful stage Cristmas tree. Hastily she explains her scheme, and the two eagerly set off for the theater. The little one has been dreaming of a burly, genial Santa Claus who appeared in their sordid kitchen with a sackful of splendid presents which he piled in the delighted youngster's lap. Her cheeks are still wet with the tears which come on finding the visit was only a dream and the presents vanished. Once past the sleeping door-keeper and on the magic stage, she quickly brightens. Her mother slips into Columbine's dressing-room and a few moments later comes dancing and smiling on to the stage in tights and ruffles. The little audience of one watches in ecstasy. Crushing back the pain of the lam ankle, the theater-cleaner bows and pirouettes, but suddenly she falters. Hardship and poverty have left their mark—the exertion and excitement have overtaxed the feeble heart, and Columbine slips dying to the stage.

Here Harlequin—tired of waiting outside for his laggard sweetheart—enters and discovers her. Help quickly comes, but too late for the dying woman, and her child is led quietly away. After all, the Christmas Eve does not prove a barren one, for it brings to the child a new, bright home with the mother of Columbine.

THE CRUCIBLE (Famous Players—Five Parts).—Jean Fanshaw is brought up by her father as nearly like a boy as possible, with the result that, when he dies, her mother and sister, quite primly different from the high-spirited, sincere and prankish Jean, misunderstand and dislike her thoroughly, and ill-treat her accordingly. Her sister, Amelia, a sedate and self-righteous girl, magnifies all Jean's tempers and eccentricities, until Mrs. Fanshaw believes Jean to be a perfect fiend, and causes friends and neighbors to think the same. One day, at a picnic, a playful trick of Jean's enrages her mother and sister, and when they arrive home Amelia nags and bullies Jean till she catches up a sickle in a spirit of mischief, threatening to defend herself with it, if necessary. Amelia, alarmed, throws her hand up with a quick motion, and cuts herself, on the sickle. She runs screaming to her mother, declaring that Jean has attacked her. This her mother believes, and joins her outcries to Amelia's; the constable and neighbors run in, and eventually Jean is sentenced to the reformatory, where the riff-raff of the town and state are collected, and among them Stella Wilkes, a notorious girl of the village, who is one of the first to welcome Jean to the house of refuge. At first, the refined and sensitive Jean is overwhelmed by the disgrace of her imprisonment, and crushed by her sordid environment, but gradually her strength of character asserts itself. She determines to escape from the reformatory, and succeeding, meets in the woods, Craig Atwood, a young artist, who, learning her sad story, advises her to go back and serve out her term, so that she may avoid all danger of being recaptured. Jean sees the wisdom of his advice, and that it is the nobler part. She returns to the refuge, and later, in a riot among the girls, led by Stella Wilkes, saves the matron from assault, and wins her pardon. Not being wanted at home by her proud mother and her sister Amelia, now married, she goes to the city and obtains employment, only to be hounded from her position and shamed everywhere by the vengeful Stella Wilkes, who has sworn to "get even." Almost at the brink of despair, she again meets the artist of her adventure in the woods, and after a hasty wooing, she promises to become his wife. How the cup of happiness is snatched from her lips, how the shadow of the reformatory again looms over her, how she heaps coals of fire upon her weak sister's head, saving Amelia's home, and how she regains her own love, and is rewarded for her long struggle against evil and despair, are vividly unfolded in this photoplay.

THE CONSPIRACY (Famous Players—Four Parts).—Though famous for his clever mystery stories, Winthrop Clavering's literary triumphs are embittered by the scoffing of certain rival writers and reporters, who jeer at his reputation for discernment, and claim that some discoveries of his pertaining to real crimes, were due to luck rather than to skill. So when a murder is committed by an unknown person, under peculiar circumstances that baffle police and reporters, Clavering throws himself eagerly into a solution of the mystery, and begins a new story, which is to deal with the present case in hand, and in which he expects to prove that the person half-suspected by the police is not the true murderer. The murder was that of a Spaniard, Pedro Alvarez, in his rooms at the Beaumont hotel. Just before dying, the victim had the strength to gasp over the telephone that his murderer was a woman; but nothing more had been learned, save that a veiled woman had visited him that afternoon, of whom all trace had been lost. Even his stenographer, a young girl, was strangely missing. Clavering, needing the assistance of a stenographer himself, visits the City Refuge for Homeless Girls, as they make a business to furnish stenographers, typewriters and secretaries. Clavering tells the manager he wants a girl with no foolishness or followers, and that she must be willing to forego all society and stay at his house constantly while at work on the wonderful new story. He engages the services of a young girl who, just come to the Refuge, frightened and nervous, is only too glad to get a position that enables her to stay closely in the house. A young reporter recognizes her as a girl he had rescued from a band of crooks, and before she leaves with Clavering gets her confidence and her story. Her real name is Margaret Holt, and she is the sister of the assistant to the District Attorney. She was at one time the captive of a band of white slavers, known as the Scarlet Band, and had escaped from the place during a fire. Ever since this terrible experience the girl and her brother had hounded the Scarlet Band, in whose existence Clavering was the only other believer, though he had known nothing of Margaret and her story. The young reporter promises to help Margaret, who had killed the Spaniard to save her brother, who was in danger from the miscreants, for she is the much-wanted murderess herself. Thanking him she goes with Clavering and to her horror discovers it is the story of the murder she herself committed that she is to work on. Clavering's astute discovery of this fact, his forcing her to take the dictation of his solution of the murder, which is the true one and how he finally ranges himself on the girl's side, spares her, captures the famous Scarlet Band, refuting the sneers of his incredulous enemies, and helps along the romance of his young stenographer and the cub reporter, is amusingly and excitingly told in one of the most stirring of film dramas.

WITHOUT HOPE (Flamingo—Five Parts).—In a short prologue, Gunpowder Wetherill, a millionaire chemist, discovers the formula for making noiseless gunpowder and at once telegraphs Washington of his success. The War and Navy Departments tell him to take the formula and proceed to Hampton Roads, where all tests will be made. The secret of the discovery is closely guarded. But an indiscreet young under-secretary lets slip a stray word to a reporter regarding the new discovery and the newspapers seize upon it and make it public.

Into an international conspiracy to rob Wetherill of his formula is thrust Hope Flannigan, a little slavey employed as a dishwasher in a small Sixth avenue restaurant conducted by Gaston, a spy employed by a foreign government. He and his woman confederate, La Belle, receive instructions to gain possession of the formula. Wetherill has a daughter, Irene, and Gaston determines to obtain the formula and marry the daughter as well. But he reckons without the sentimental Madame Claire, cashier of Maison Gaston, to whom he has made love in odd moments. Madame Claire precipitates a quarrel which takes place in the kitchen of the restaurant. On Hope, however, unable to restrain her laughter, falls the weight of Gaston's fury and she flees from his wrath.

On the same day, Irene Wetherill sets out to attend a meeting of the Big Sisters' Society. On the steps of the lecture hall she meets the prim old Misses Alstyn and their nephew Van, with whom she is in love. Van tells her that he thinks the play he has written is "going over" and if so they will have a "dash to the altar." Van, on reaching the manager's office, has his play returned with an admonition to write about things as they really happen.

Meanwhile the lecturer of the afternoon insists that no one is a true Big Sister unless she take a girl in distress into her own home and keep her there. Fired with enthusiasm, the Misses Alstyn, on their way home, meet the weeping Hope, whom they take home.

Van, with very little money, feels he cannot marry, but Irene reassures him and begs him to try to go to Stormcliffs, as she and her father are leaving for a week's rest before going to Hampton Roads. His eye by chance lights upon an advertisement calling for first class waiters at the hotel where Irene will stop, and he decides to apply for a job to earn his board, disguising himself in his role as waiter and collecting local color as well for his play. He gets the job. Gaston, posing as Count Tomaso, and LaBelle as Mrs. Dardenell, follow them. Van's aunts decide to surprise their nephew whom they believe is stopping at the hotel as a guest, and descend upon him. They take Hope with them.

The conspirators gain the friendship of Irene and her father, and Van, helpless in his waiter's garb, grows jealous. The arrival of Hope changes matters, for Gaston she recognizes as her old employer and walks toward him with hands outstretched in greeting.

Gaston declares he does not know her and Miss Amelie Alstyn apologizes for her profusely. Hope unconsciously has won the admiration of Adolph, a bell boy. La Belle and Gaston plan to strike that night, Gaston gives her a tablet with which she is to drug Wetherill's wine. Hope, wandering alone, faces Gaston for the second time. He threatens to kill her if she breathes his name to a soul or tells of his meeting LaBelle there. LeBelle joins in and Hope, terrified, escapes. Van finds her and she tells him the whole story. Adolph sees her in conversation with the pseudo-waiter and tells the Misses Alstyn, who lock her in her room that night as a punishment. Van, meanwhile, comes face to face with Irene, who is angry at his neglect of her and tells him the Count is giving a dinner in his rooms for her and her father that night. Van is assigned to wait at the Count's dinner. After dinner Gaston takes Irene out on a small balcony and La Belle drugs Wetherill's wine. Van watches, and when Wetherill becomes drugged LaBelle starts to rob; Van springing from his hiding place, accuses her; but she realizes that he can prove nothing. The glass is drained; the formula undisturbed. Irene and Gaston enter and LeBelle tells her that her father was taken suddenly ill. Gaston offers to go for help, but Van sends for the manager and detectives, declaring he has a witness who can prove who Gaston is. Then he starts to bring Hope.

But Hope finding a note under her door from Adolph, begging her to climb down the ladder attached to the porch outside the room, and at Adolph's earnest proposal decides whimsically that she might as well marry him as go back to the "two kind-hearted old funerals" and elopes.

Van, bursting into the room for his one and only witness, finds it empty.

Wetherill is angry with Van for accusing LaBelle with whom he has become infatuated and Van returns home. Hope meanwhile arrives home with her new husband, and desiring to show him off to the girls in "Gaston's old place," stops in there. There Madam Claire learns for the first time of Gaston's whereabouts and, insane with jealousy she brandishes a letter in which he promised to return and marry her and forces Hope and Adolph to go to him with her.

Gaston writes to Wetherill asking his daughter's hand in marriage. Irene indignantly refuses, but takes the letter, and meets Gaston in the foyer. There as she talks with him Madame Claire looms up followed by Hope and Adolph. Gaston's identity is proven and he and LaBelle are arrested.

AS A MAN SOWS (Aquilla—Five Parts).—Hugo Gaspard, manager of the Monopol Bank, appropriates money deposited in his charge and finds himself face to face with ruin. Learning that there is to be an inspection of his books, he breaks into the bank at night in order to pretend that the place has been robbed by burglars. He is surprised by Wallis, the night watchman, whom he shoots. Fatally wounded, Wallis manages to write a note convicting Gaspard before he dies, and detectives are sent to arrest the manager. Gaspard escapes from the detectives and succeeds in fleeing to a distant town. Later on he learns that he need no longer fear the police, as a man killed on the railway is believed to be himself.

Twenty years later Gaspard's wife has changed her name to Graham. An inherited fortune provides for herself and her son Arthur, whom she has brought up in ignorance of his father's crime. Iris, the daughter of the night watchman, has become a stage star. Whilst resting in the country she meets Arthur and the couple fall in love. Arthur's mother learns that Iris is the daughter of her husband's victim, but she does not make her identity known to the girl.

When Iris return to the city to rehearse for a new production, Arthur, finding life impossible without her, follows, but becomes involved in money difficulties and appeals to his mother for help. His mother advances him money, but tells him that he must go away. On leaving the house that night Arthur misses the last train to town, so is forced to return home. In the meantime Gaspard has continued his life of crime under the name of Ralston. His confederate, Jacobs, suggests that he rob the lonely house in which Mrs. Graham lives, and Gaspard unaware that Mrs. Graham is his own wife, plans the robbery, taking with him Jacobs's little daughter Girda.

The girl is forced to climb through a small window into the house, after which she opens the front door for Gaspard. On gaining admittance he sends back the girl with a note to Jacobs, telling him that his plan is certain of success. Whilst robbing the safe in the house Gaspard is surprised by his wife. He shoots her and makes his escape. Arthur is accused of the crime, it being well known that he is in need of money.

A day later Girda, lost in the city, is run over by a motor car, and Iris, taking pity on the waif, has her removed to her home. Girda still has in her possession the note Gaspard sent to his accomplice, and this arouses the suspicion of Iris. That night at the theatre she receives an invitation from Gaspard, who has witnessed the performance, and Iris, seeing that his writing is identical with that on the note taken from Girda, decides to attend the fete at Gaspard's home. Later she drugs the man in order that she may search his house for further evidence against him.

Finding the letter from Jacobs in which the robbery was first suggested, she telephones for the police. Gaspard, however, recovers from the effects of the drug before the police arrive and makes his escape by way of a secret passage leading to a sewer. He wrecks his home with explosives, but a spring lock on the sewer gate entraps him. As Iris has taken his keys, he is forced to remain in the vicinity of the explosion and meets a terrible doom. Later Arthur's mother recognizes the dead man as her assailant, and the young man's innocence is established. The mother keeps Arthur in ignorance of his dead father's guilt, and later the young man finds happiness with Iris as his bride.

WORLD FILM CORP.

"IN THE LAND OF THE HEAD HUNTERS" (Seattle Film Co., Inc.—Dec.).—To gain power from the spirit forces, Motana, the son of a great chief, goes on a vigil journey. Through the fasting and hardships of the vigil he hopes to gain supernatural strength which will make him a chief not less powerful than his father, Kenada. First upon a mountain's peak he builds a prayer-fire to the Gods. After long dancing about the sacred flames he drops from exhaustion and in vision-sleep the face of a maid appears in the coiling smoke; thus breaking the divine law which forbids thought of women during the fasting.

Now he must pass another stronger ordeal. Leaving his desecrated fire to go to the Island of the Dead he meets Naida, the maid of his dream, and woos her. She tells him she is promised to the hideous Sorcerer. Motana bids the maid return to her father and say that when this vigil is over he will come with a wealth of presents and beg her hand in marriage. Now he renews his quest of spirit power and tests his courage by spending the night in the fearful "house of skulls." And to prove his prowess he goes in quest of sea-lions and then performs the greatest feat of all—the capture of a whale.

Then, for his final invocation to the Gods, Motana again builds his sacred fire upon the heights. While he fasts and dances there about his sacred fire the Sorcerer, in a dark glade of the forest, has gathered about him fellow workers in evil magic and they sing "short life songs" to destroy him. The Sorcerer sends his daughter to find Motana and in some way get a lock of his hair, that they may destroy his life by incantation. This plotting woman, on seeing Motana asleep by his fire becomes infatuated with him and decides to risk even the wrath of her Sorcerer father and win the love of Motana. When she awakens him with caressing words, he bids her begone, as he is not thinking of women, but of the spirits. With angry threats she departs, but in stealth watches the faster until he drops asleep, then creeping up steals his necklace and a lock of hair, and disappears.

Motana, returning, asks his father to send messengers demanding the hand of Naida. Her father, Waket, replies to the messengers: "My daughter is promised to the fearful Sorcerer of Yilis. We dread his evil magic. We also fear Yaklus, the head hunter, the brother of the Sorcerer. The Sorcerer is proof against knife and spear and arrow. Yaklus and his clan know no conqueror." The followers of Motana and Kenada prove that the power of the Sorcerer cannot avail against the wrath of the raven-clan, who are determined to rid the region of the head hunters. The head of the Sorcerer they bring to prove his death. But unknown to them, Yaklus, the head-hunting chief, has escaped. In great pomp of primitive pageantry Naida and Motana are married. Yet even while the wedding dancers make merry, a cloud of tragedy hangs over them, for Yaklus and the survivors of his village are athirst for vengeance. Enraged at the death of his brother, the Sorcerer, he runs "pahu-paku," and is really Yaklus, "the short life bringer."

In his magnificent high-prowed canoes he starts upon his war of vengeance. It is his law that the war party destroy all who are met, whether friend or foe. While on their foray fishing parties and travelers are encountered. Then they make their night attack upon the village of Motana. Kenada and his tribesmen give way before the infuriated Yaklus, and amid the smoke and flames of the burning village Motana is wounded and Naida is carried away to captivity.

Yaklus, returning to his village, gives a great dance of victory. The frenzied warriors demand the life of Naida. Yaklus bids her come and dance for them. If she dances well enough to please him he will spare her life. If not, they will throw her to the "hungry wolves." So well does she dance that Yaklus spares her. In the sleeping hours Naida sends her fellow captive slave with a token and message to Motana, who has been revived by surviving medicine men of his village. When he receives the message from his bride-wife Motana calls for volunteers. By stealth he rescues her. Yaklus in rage starts in pursuit. Motana, hard pressed, dares the waters of the surging gorge of Hyal through which he passes in safety. Great was his "water magic." Yaklus attempts to follow but the raging waters of the gorge sweep upon him and he and his grizzly followers become the prey of the evil ones of the sea.

"AS YE SOW" (Erady—Five Parts).—Dora, the daughter of a wealthy man, marries a good looking young fellow from the country who has made an auspicious start in New York business life. Having won the girl by trickery, he proceeds to reveal a baseness of disposition which makes the life of his young wife a terrible burden. He becomes a drunkard and ill-treats his wife and baby child. Dora resents his cruelty and he robs her of the child, surreptitiously conveying it to his mother and then, himself, going away to sea on a fishing schooner.

Dora, bereft of husband and child, becomes a prey to grief. She is in all essentials a widow, for the news comes that her vicious young husband was drownded at sea. Fresh sufferings await the girl. Concealing her identity, she makes her way to the fishing village where her husband was born; becomes the paying guest of his mother; recognizes her own child; and excites the love of her husband's brother, now a clergyman.

Dora's troubles are about to recommence with undiminished severity. Her husband married her under a false name, so she is in ignorance of his relatives. And in this state of ignorance she lends a willing ear to the woolngs of the Rev. John St. John, her late husband's brother. The wedding ceremony is about to take place when a storm at sea arises; a ship in distress is sighted; there is a call to man the life-boat, and Dora's fiancee volunteers. Among the rescued there is Dora's legal husband, Frank.

Frank re-asserts his claim to wife and child; grows jealous of his brother and once more becomes a drunkard. One of his New York reprobate companions appears to demand money. There is a quarrel and both men are killed. The sinful man has reaped as he sowed and like so many of his kind has made others suffer for his misdeeds, particularly the fond girl who married him.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY.

"OFFICER 666." (Five Parts—George Kleine.) Travers Gladwin, a young millionaire, returns incognito from abroad with his Jap servant, Bateato, after cabling his chum Whitney Barnes to meet him that evening at the Gladwin mansion. Al Wilson, a picture thief, arrives from Europe the same afternoon. He has obtained keys to the Gladwin mansion from a dismissed servant of Gladwin's and, parading under the other's name, wins the love of romantic Helen Burton with whom he plans to elope at ten thirty that night.

Bateato goes to the mansion at once and excites the suspicions of Phelan, "Officer 666," whom he finally satisfies as to his identity. A few minutes later Whitney Barnes reaches the home, followed shortly after by Travers. This visit is interrupted by the arrival of Helen Burton and her friend, Sadie Small, and Helen explains that she intends that evening to elope with her sweetheart, Travers Gladwin. Amazed at first, Travers scents trouble and then pretends an intimate friendship with Gladwin. Barnes, under the influence of a brilliant idea, takes Sadie aside and advises that she tell her aunt of the proposed elopement. Both girls leave, promising to return at 10:30. Gladwin at once determines upon a plan, brings in "Officer 666," borrows his uniform and, sending Phelan to the kitchen with Bateato, goes into the street, where he purchases a false mustache and returns.

Sadie and her aunt call and Gladwin hides, leaving Phelan and Barnes to face the music. After threatening to have them arrested, the two women leave in high dudgeon, the house is darkened and Barnes and Phelan go into the kitchen to entertain themselves in anticipation of Wilson's visit. Promptly at ten, Wilson slips into the house and begins cutting valuable oil paintings from their frames. He is surprised by the sudden appearance of Gladwin in Phelan's uniform and immediately puts the pseudo-policeman to work helping him pack the canvases. Helen arrives and does not recognize Gladwin in his false mustache and policeman's uniform, but when Wilson goes up stairs for a moment, Travers quickly explains the situation, advising Helen to be quiet to avoid scandal. In the meantime the excitable Jap, Bateato, alarmed at the strange doings, brings a captain and two patrolmen toward the house. Phelan enters the parlor and demands the return of his uniform, explaining the matter to Wilson. Travers dares not tell the truth for fear of implicating Helen for whom he has already formed a strong attachment. Thus Wilson easily brands Gladwin as the real thief. Meantime at Phelan's approach, Helen hides herself in the hallway clothes closet. At this juncture the police enter with the Jap and Phelan denounces Gladwin. The captain praised Phelan and sends him on his beat. The Jap, seeing a door partly open, reaches in and drags Helen into the parlor. Barnes, attracted by the noise, enters from the kitchen and a patrolman promptly claps the handcuffs on that unfortunate gentleman, much to his subsequent misery and woe. Helen takes advantage of the confusion to slip into the closet.

The situation is further complicated by the arrival of Sadie and her aunt with a half dozen policemen. One of them takes a long look at Wilson, recognizes him as an old offender and steps forward to arrest him. Instantly Wilson throws the room into darkness and jumps unseen into a large chest. The police scamper in all directions, leaving Gladwin alone in the parlor. A moment later Wilson emerges, revolver in hand, and exchanges some pleasantries with Gladwin, who for Helen's sake is anxious that the thief should escape. A fresh wagon load of police arrive and among them Phelan, who, seeing Galdwin at liberty in the parlor, promptly leaps upon him. The captain enters and upbraids Phelan and leaves with Gladwin to search the roof. Wilson takes advantage of the opportunity to step from behind the portieres, chloroform Phelan, don his uniform and toss him into the big chest. Then he calmly walks into the street, informs the wagon-driver that he is wanted inside by the captain, and cooly makes his escape on the driver's seat of the empty patrol. Meanwhile in the library Barnes, still handcuffed, after failing in his desperate effort to embrace Sadie, brings her into the parlor where Travers and Helen are engaged in rescuing the unhappy Phelan. And when Sadie makes a promise to Barnes and Helen to Travers, that wealthy young gentlemen makes another to Phelan—that uniform or no uniform there will always be a job waiting for "666."

THE LITTLE GIRL THAT HE FORGOT (Five Parts).—June Holly, an orphan, lives in the lumber district of Missouri with her Uncle Jim and her grandmother. She is possessed of a beautiful face and affectionate nature. David Stone, a manly young lumberman, is in love with June; But Uptergraft, another lumberman, devoid of character or principle, also admires June, but she resents his rough embraces by slapping his face, and he becomes her bitter enemy.

A new and romantic interest comes into June's life, when she meets Alan Powell, the only son of a wealthy St. Louis lumber merchant, who has sent him to the lumber region to buy lumber. Alan and June fall in love with each other. He is young and thoughtless and she ignorant of life. David surprises the lovers in the woods and attacks Alan, who, thinking to save the girl's reputation, tells David that he was not in love with June, but that there was only a harmless flirtation between them. Shortly after, Alan is called back to St. Louis.

In a letter which Alan sends to June, he assures her of his true and devoted love and that he is coming to take her to their own home as soon as he returns from an extended business trip. This letter gets into the hands of David, who destroys it. June is greatly worried by the failure to hear from her lover and decides to leave home during the night to seek Alan. At his office, she learns that he has left on a business trip and is not expected back for several months. Disheartened, she starts for her home. On the way, the starving girl sinks exhausted on the doorstep of a farm house and the kind-hearted farmer's wife takes the destitute girl in and gives her a home. Later June's baby is born, and as soon as able the young mother determines to return to her people. Tramping wearily along the road, carrying her child, she falls and the baby striking its head on a rock, is instantly killed. Shocked with grief and horror, June leaves her dead baby in some bushes on the roadside. She has, however, been seen by two men who had been following her; they find the dead child and inform the sheriff. The distracted mother is arrested, despite the heroic attempt of David Stone to save her. She is accused of child murder and thrown into prison. Martha Green, a friend of June's, a member of the Salvation Army, dispensing comfort amongst the poor, learns of June's terrible plight and writes Alan to hurry to June's rescue. Alan reaches Lumberville as June is being examined in court. He rushes into the court room and explains to the judge and jury that he is the cause of the girl's misfortune and begs their mercy. The jury, however, finds June guilty of murder and she is sentenced to be hanged. Alan goes to the governor of the state to plead for her life, but the governor refuses to interfere with the sentence of the court.

On the day set for the execution, June, overwhelmed by the thought of the awful death that awaits her, breaks down utterly and in her agony shrieks and pleads for mercy. When the warden and sheriff come to conduct her to the scaffold and all hope appears to be gone, a telephone message comes from the governor staying the execution; Alan's impassioned second pleading before the governor for his sweetheart's life having won a pardon for her.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE MASTER KEY (Episode Five—Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of Dec. 14).—At the conclusion of the fourth episode Dore barely saved himself from plunging through a blazing bridge into the depths of the canyon. The introduction of the fifth episode of the serial shows Tom Kane, cook of "The Master Key" mine, coming to the rescue of Dore as he lies half conscious on the brink of the precipice. Wilkerson, who set fire to the bridge, meanwhile, is on his way toward San Francisco. En route he sends a telegram to Drake and the latter meets him at the station.

Mrs. Darnell, Drake and Ruth are registered at the Manx Hotel, the adventuress and confidence man passing off the pretty young woman as their daughter.

Upon arriving at the hotel Drake, Wilkerson and Mrs. Darnell discuss their plan to secure control of "The Master Key" mine. Ruth, secreted in her room, overhears the conversation and learns for the first time that she has been trapped by her dead father's enemies.

In oder to prevent the conspirators from securing the deeds to "The Master Key" mine, Ruth locks them in a dresser drawer and puts the key in her grip. The conspirators enter Ruth's room soon afterward and, realizing that she has been listening, seize her. In the struggle Ruth faints and the conspirators decide to get her out of the hotel at once. They 'phone for a taxi, bundle Ruth up and rush her downstairs through the lobby of the hotel to the taxi, only stopping long enough to pay their bill.

The hotel clerk and house detective think the hurried departure strange, and try to stop Drake and Mrs. Darnell. Failing in this they give chase in another taxicab. The pursuit brings them to Chinatown, where they arrive in time to see Wilkerson force Ruth into an opium den owned by Sing Wah, a former opium smuggler.

Dore meanwhile arrives in San Francisco, and goes to the Manx Hotel. The only suite vacant is that just given up by the conspirators. Dore unpacks his personal effects in the room from which Ruth has just been hurried away. One of the dresser drawers is locked and Dore sends for a key. The drawer is opened and, to his surprise, the young mining engineer finds deeds to "The Master Key" mine within.

THE MASTER KEY (Special—Two Parts—Dec. 21).—Dore learns from the hotel authorities of the mysterious disappearance of Mrs. Darnell and her companions. Aided by the hotel detective they find the taxi driver who drove the party and direct him to take them to the place where he drove the others. An immediate search of Chinatown is begun. By accident Dore sees Drake enter a Chinese shop. Meanwhile, Mrs. Darnell and Wilkerson have discovered that the deeds to the mine are not in Ruth's grip, as they supposed. Believing that Ruth has them they send Drake to win her confidence and thus secure them. When he enters the shop Dore, the detective and the taxi driver follow. They see him disappear through a panel door and hurry out for police assistance. In the interim, Sing Wah, the Chinese, has decided to hold Ruth for his own purpose. When Drake comes for her, he escapes from the cylindrical trap room and takes her down to the bay, with the intention of carrying her to a safe hiding place. Dore and the detective with police assistance return quickly, and a general raid on the opium den is made. Drake evades the police. He does not meet Dore but escapes and returns to the lodging house, where he reports his failure to secure the papers.

Dore and the detective are trapped in the cylindrical room by a Chinese woman who had previously guarded Ruth. Dore is slightly injured, and in the excitement of the moment the woman pulls a trap and drops the mining engineer and the detective into the water underneath the den. They swim to a row boat and thus pass through the underground canal into the bay. They come upon Sing Wah with Ruth and an exciting chase follows, ending with the rescue of Ruth.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURES.

SYLVIA GRAY—(Four Parts)—Vain and ashamed of their poverty, Sylvia Gray, wife of Henry Gray, an unsuccessful playwright, elopes with Lennox, a wealthy young man, taking her daughter, "Silvery," with her. The child is later taken away by Margy, an old servant, and brought up in another city. Lennox deserts Sylvia and she goes partly insane, finally killing him. Her daughter, "Silvery," becomes an artist's model and falls in love with Vanveldt, her employer. Meeting Frankenstein, a hypnotist, whose wife, Vivette, is intensely jealous of him, "Silvery" falls under his influence. Meanwhile, Sylvia returns to Gray and finds he has become blind, with no recollection of the past. She uses her utmost endeavors to make reparation for the past in caring for him, and gradually his memory returns. He remembers he has received a large sum of money for one of his plays and hidden it. They find it and Frankenstein, who learns of the recovery of the treasure, forces "Silvery," while under his power, to rob the old man. She is about to stab Gray when Frankenstein is killed by Vivette—the spell is broken and all ends happily in the betrothal of "Silvery" and Vanveldt and the reunion of Mr. Gray and Sylvia, who remorsefully and penitently admits the justice of all her punishment and determines that the past shall be forgotten in the happiness of the future.

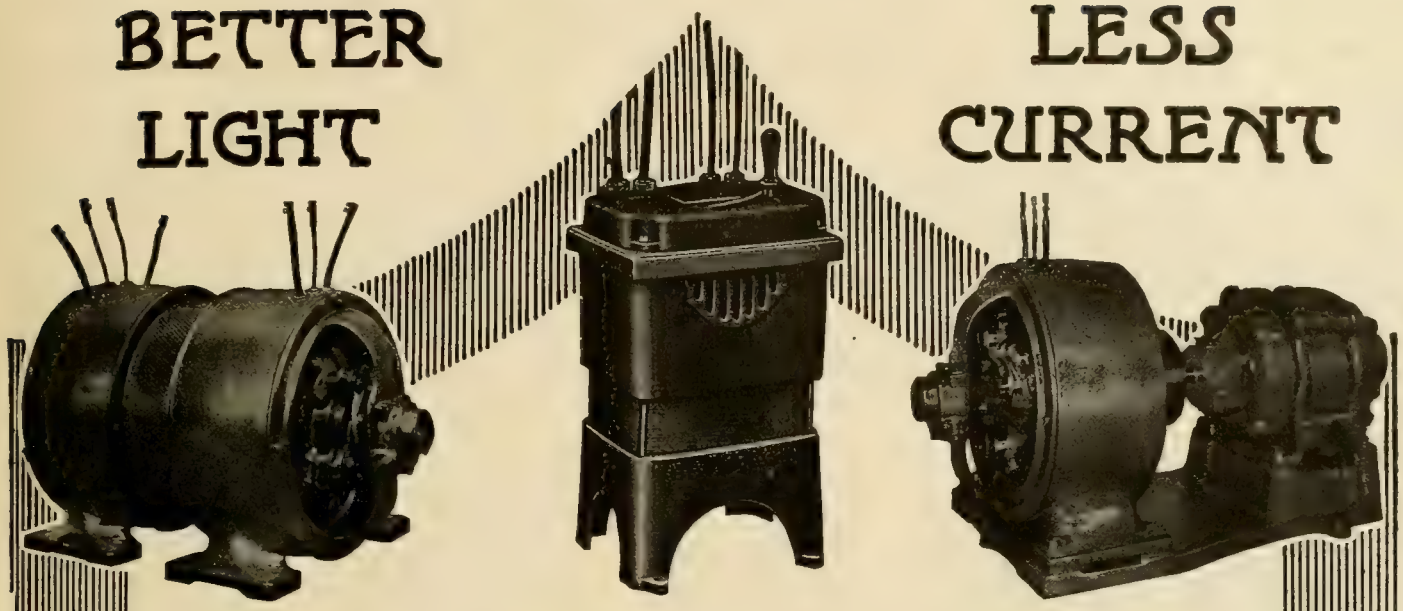
BETTER LIGHT LESS CURRENT



The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.

The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.

The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

FORT WAYNE ELECTRIC WORKS OF GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY
1702 BROADWAY
FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

Compensarcs are so commonly found in motion picture theatres that many people now call all current saving and transforming devices by that name.

But Remember

If it isn't a FORT WAYNE *it isn't a "COMPENSARC"*

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

GOOD Two Plano Fig. 1 | BETTER One Meniscus One Plano Fig. 2 | BEST One Meniscus One Bi-Convex Fig. 3

OUR FAMOUS MENISCUS-BI-CONVEX CONDENSER COMBINATIONS HAVE TAKEN THE COUNTRY BY STORM. THEY HAVE CAUSED not only the very best operators but men whose authority on perfect projection is above question to come out publicly and indorse our wonderful condenser combinations. We have just received direct from Paris another big shipment of two thousand pairs of meniscus and bi-convex condensers and can take care of you immediately.

Meniscus-Bi-Convex condensers sell for two dollars each or four dollars per set. Include 20 cents additional for parcel post. In ordering give distance of projection machine and current used.

Remember MENISCUS-BI-CONVEX CONDENSERS COST MORE, BUT THEY ARE WORTH THE DIFFERENCE.

Order direct from us; we are exclusive jobbers and are on the job.

Stockton's Scriptwriting Service

To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:

Script Criticism For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.

Plot Estimates If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script. I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.

Please Note My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

READ THINK ACT

During the past week we have installed Mirroroide Screens in 40 Theatres, names furnished on application. These Theatres represent the finest and most up-to-date in the country. In addition we have made and sold 8000 screens, resulting in 8000 satisfied users.

Don't take our word for it. Send for our large free samples. Use your eyes and be convinced. Write to the Managers of any theatre where Mirroroide is used and see if Mirroroide is not what we claim for it. Clearer, brighter pictures, regardless from what angle viewed. Keep your house lights turned on during projection sufficiently to read the print of an ordinary newspaper, thus making your theatre well lighted, well ventilated, and insuring Perfect Moral Conditions at All Times.

A TWO-REEL SELIG DRAMA—RELEASED MONDAY, DEC. 28

THE FLOWER OF FAITH

Constancy at Last Rewarded

Written by WILL M. HOUGH. Production directed by F. J. GRANDON

The story of a beautiful country girl, who loves roses and whose fate is intertwined with these beautiful blossoms. She goes to the city, meets with various mishaps and misfortunes, is rescued from suicide by a Salvation Army lass, and the story ends happily by her reunion with her village lover. It is a genuine love story and the pictures tell it in an exceptionally interesting manner.

WAR PICTURES FROM EUROPE

Released Monday, December 28.....One Reel

As heretofore, our camera men have sent in the latest and most up-to-date war news pictures from European battlefields. Thrilling and of vital interest.

A SELIG WESTERN COMEDY.

Cactus Jake, Heart Breaker

Released Tuesday, December 29.....One Reel

In this typical cowboy picture, TOM MIX performs some unusually thrilling "stunts" on horseback. He is ably supported by GOLDIE COLWELL and other well known Selig actors. The heroine disguises herself as a cowboy with laughable results.

A SELIG DRAMA.

The Old Letter

Released Wednesday, December 30.....One Reel

BESSIE EYTON appears at her best in this picture as a young girl in love with a newspaper reporter. She is engaged to marry a detective, who gives her up to his friend whom he saves from unjust imprisonment.

VIEWS AND WORLD EVENTS.

Releasd Thursday, December 31.....One Reel

Vivid and thrilling war news pictures taken on European battlefields by our own camera men. Views of leading events in all parts of the world. Timely and interesting.

A SELIG FARCE-COMEDY

Wipe Yer Feet

Released Friday, January 1.....One Reel

The mishaps of a humble family, the members of which are the slaves of an energetic housewife, are portrayed in a laughable manner by JOHN LANCASTER, LYLLIAN BROWN LEIGHTON, ELSIE GREESON, SIDNEY SMITH and other Selig comedians. Full of ludicrous situations.

A SELIG JUNGLE-ZOO DRAMA.

Lassoing a Lion

Released Saturday, January 2.....One Reel
